EXPLANATION

THE object in view in preparing Corpus Juris Secundum has been twofold: First, to provide a complete encyclopedic treatment of the whole body of the law, which means that it must be based upon all the reported cases; Second, to present each title of the law in form and content most suitable as a means of practical reference for the Bench and Bar.

Corpus Juris Secundum is therefore a complete restatement of the entire body of American Law. The clear-cut and exhaustive propositions comprising the text are supported by all the authorities from the earliest times to date. The supporting case citations, conspicuously set out in the notes, point to all decisions handed down since the publication of Corpus Juris. When the searcher may wish to consult earlier authorities, a specific reference to Corpus Juris makes available all cases back to 1658.

Each title is preceded by a complete section analysis, greatly simplified to facilitate research. Where the scope of any section is such as to require it, a more minute analysis is found thereunder in its appropriate place within the title (see Abatement and Revival, Section 112). The convenience of this method—an innovation in encyclopedic writing—must immediately commend itself.

A concise black-letter summary, indicative of its scope, precedes the full treatment or statement of the law under each section. These introductory summaries, concise and free from interlineation of authorities, have proven of great convenience and value in legal research.

An index is found in the back of each volume covering the titles contained therein, thus providing another convenient means of ready access to the text and notes.

Corpus Juris Secundum is kept to date by means of annual cumulative pocket parts for each volume. This feature of supplementation which has proved so successful in modern digests and statutes conveniently, and with certainty, keeps each title constantly to date through current cases and new precedents.

Corpus Juris Secundum represents the combined products of the highest editorial talent and manufacturing skill. Its many excellent editorial features are fittingly accompanied by corresponding innovations and improvements in mechanical arrangement, typography, and design, which the publisher believes will commend themselves to the profession as representing a new standard in legal publications.

N. REVIEW—Continued

14. DETERMINATION AND DISPOSITION OF PROCEEDING

§ 782. In General

- a. Administrative review
- b. Judicial review

a. Administrative Review

On appeal to the full board or commission, it may affirm, reverse, modify, or adopt the decision of the hearing officer.

Ordinarily, the hearing officer, examiner, referee, or single member of the board or commission is regarded as a mere agent of the compensation board or commission,²³ and no appeal to the courts lies from the award of the referee or hearing officer, but only from the determination of the board.²⁴ The setting aside of the board's order does not reinstate the order of the hearing officer.²⁵

may reverse such findings,²⁸ and may make such award as the facts found by it require,²⁹ without taking additional testimony or evidence,³⁰ or holding a new hearing,³¹ but where this is done the board must do so formally, making distinct findings of fact.³² Where the board reverses the referee's finding of lack of jurisdiction, it should afford the employer an opportunity to cross-examine before determining the case on the merits.³³

In the absence of statutory authority the industrial board cannot set aside findings of an arbitration board³⁴ or referee.³⁵ An award by an arbitration board may be modified on appeal to the full board given the power of review where the act evidently contemplates a trial de novo on appeal.³⁶

As a general rule, the determination by the full board supersedes the decision of the hearing officer, referee, or single member,³⁷ and it has been held that, on appeal to the board, it is its duty to make a new and independent order or award.³⁸ Under some statutes, it is provided that the review of an award shall not affect money previously paid.³⁹ The board may alter the award in favor of a nonappealing party.⁴⁰

In the absence of anything in the statute giving it such authority, the board or commission is without the power to remand on reviewing the award of an arbitrator⁴¹ or one of its members,⁴² but it is ordinarily held that the board may remand the matter for further proceedings by the hearing officer.⁴³ It has been indicated that the board may not make a finding as to a matter not determined by the referee or hearing officer, but must remand as to such matter.⁴⁴ An application to the commission for remand of a case to the trial commissioner for further testimony should be supported by some showing as to the nature and materiality of such testimony and as to why it could not be, or was not, produced;⁴⁵ and where not so supported, the denial of a request to remand is not erroneous.⁴⁶ On remand, further proceedings must be in compliance with the mandate of the board.⁴⁷

Where the act provides for review by a board and requires concurrence of a majority thereof, the decision must fill the statutory requirements.⁴⁸ Under some statutes, it is provided that only those members of the board who participate in the hearing of the appeal may participate in the making of the decision;⁴⁹ and a board member who heard the case but did not participate in the hearing of the appeal may not participate in the board's determination of the appeal.⁵⁰ A majority of the members of the board are sufficient to hear an appeal,⁵¹ and a decision may be rendered by a majority of those participating in the hearing of the appeal.⁵²

According to some authorities, the order of the hearing officer is affirmed where the board is equally divided;⁵³ but other authorities hold that in such case there is no award or decision, and the matter remains undetermined.⁵⁴ The denial of a petition for review is, in substance, an affirmance.⁵⁵ On affirmance the finding of the single member must be taken as that of the board.⁵⁶

The language of the board's order is immaterial

Rival claimants

Where death benefits were paid in good faith by employer to decedent's mother after a hearing on her claim at which it was judicially determined that she was next of kin entitled to all benefits, industrial commission properly denied claim by decedent's wife, who had been separated from decedent more than five months before his death but who knew where he was living and who had failed to make inquiry as to his whereabouts for more than a year after their separation, but industrial commission did not have jurisdiction to grant relief to wife against decedent's mother.

Number of witnesses

Section of workmen's compensation act limiting each party to two medical expert witnesses, where evidence of additional witnesses would be cumulative, limits proceedings prior to final order, and where final order of trial commissioner denying an award has been vacated by industrial commission en banc and cause remanded, trial commissioner thereafter conducting proceeding may consider any additional evidence necessary in order to determine question presented.

as long as its intention is clear.⁵⁷ Under some statutes, the decision of the board or commission need not specify any details,⁵⁸ nor need it contain any findings.⁵⁹ An order of the board reciting its approval of the decision of the hearing officer, referee, or single member is a sufficient disposition of the case.⁶⁰ However, under other statutes, the board is required to render a written decision containing its findings of fact and conclusions of law.⁶¹ Where the board makes its own findings, it is not required to specify its acceptance or rejection of particular findings by the referee.⁶²

Where the board entertains an appeal, it necessarily holds that it is timely.⁶³ The board should comply with such restrictions with respect to the time to dispose of the appeal as may be imposed by statute.⁶⁴

Under some statutes there is no provision for reconsideration by the board after it renders a final decision,⁶⁵ although it is usually held that the board may withdraw or change its order prior to the expiration of the time to appeal,⁶⁶ but not thereafter.⁶⁷ The granting of a rehearing for the purpose of introducing additional evidence rests in the board's discretion.⁶⁸

Except as limited and restricted by the acts⁶⁹ which, in some jurisdictions, have been held to limit the action of the court to affirmance or annulment of the award,⁷⁰ on review of an award, the court may be authorized to make such orders with respect thereto as justice may require,⁷¹ or which the com-

As discussed in detail infra §§ 783-789, the reviewing court may affirm, modify, reverse, annul, or set aside the award or decision, dismiss the case, remand the matter, or enter final judgment.⁷³ The court, on review of an award, may, on a confession of error, reverse, vacate, or modify the award.⁷⁴ The only function of the reviewing court is, it has been said, to determine what kind of decree should be entered on a decision by the board.⁷⁵

No action on review is proper where no appeal is taken.⁷⁶ The reviewing court may not act against one not a party to the appeal.⁷⁷ Where the interests of the parties are independent, reversal as to the parties appealing does not necessitate reversal as to the parties not appealing.⁷⁸

Matters not raised or decided below are not to be decided by the reviewing court.⁷⁹ The court may not determine the case on the merits where the compensation authorities have not done so.⁸⁰ On review of a finding of the commission that it had no jurisdiction because the injury did not appear to have been received in the course of employment, the court cannot determine the extent of disability⁸¹ or amount of compensation⁸² under a statute providing that the court, having determined the employee's right to compensation, shall certify such finding or verdict to the commission which will order payment of compensation in the manner provided by the act. On appeal from an order of the commission refusing to reopen the case, the court should confine itself to determining whether the case should be reopened.⁸³

The court on review cannot require the employer to supply, or the employee to submit to, an operation.⁸⁴ The maxim "de minimus non curat lex" has been applied on review of compensation proceedings.⁸⁵

Where testimony taken on reconsideration after appeal from the first award of the commission has no bearing on the pivotal point in the case, the appeal from the first award may be considered although there is no appeal from the award made on reconsideration.⁸⁶ Where a decision of a commission is reversed and remanded, and no appeal is taken from the order within the time allowed for such appeal, it cannot be reviewed on appeal from a decision of the commission made after remand.⁸⁷

Time for decision. A decision of the reviewing court will not be delayed merely because a higher court may, in compensation cases pending before it, modify a conclusion previously announced by it and reach a conclusion more favorable to a party.⁸⁸

Findings wrong
Superior court, on appeal from accident commission's decision, was not precluded from affirming commission's decision if court should find that decision was correct but that commission's findings were wrong.

but it may not affirm an award on grounds not considered below.⁹⁵ Where prejudicial error exists, affirmance is not proper.⁹⁶

An award will be affirmed notwithstanding the failure of the board or commission to find a fact essential to support its award where the record discloses, with reasonable and satisfactory certainty, a preponderance of evidence in favor of the existence of such essential fact.⁹⁷ On an appeal by defendant from a judgment against him, plaintiff may, by a motion to dismiss, raise the question whether the questions of law involved are so doubtful as to require the filing of briefs; and, if on the resulting hearing the court is fully satisfied that no grounds for a reversal exist, an affirmance will be ordered.⁹⁸ It has been held to be inconsistent to affirm the award and to dismiss the appeal.⁹⁹ On affirmance new findings need not be made.¹ An

§ 784. Modification

As a general rule, the reviewing court may amend or revise a compensation award or decision.

Under some statutes, the court may affirm or set aside a compensation award, but may not modify it.³ Where the board or commission has continuing jurisdiction to modify an award from time to time, it has been held that a court may not modify but may only affirm or annul an award.⁴

As a general rule, however, the reviewing court may modify or revise a compensation award or decision⁵ and may correct a finding as to the extent of the disability,⁶ correct an error in designation of the member injured,⁷ correct the amount of the award,⁸ by reducing it where excessive⁹ or increasing it where too small,¹⁰ correct the period during which compensation shall be paid,¹¹ fix the date when the payments should begin,¹² and make provision for payment of interest on the award.¹³

The award cannot be amended so as to allow an amount greater than authorized by the pleadings.¹⁴ Where the judgment appealed from allows the exact amount asked for in the petition for compensation, it will not be modified to increase such amount.¹⁵ Notwithstanding evidence to support a finding of an average weekly wage of a certain amount, where the amount pleaded is smaller the judgment based on the amount found must be reduced.¹⁶ In the absence of authority in the act it has been held that a trial court cannot modify an award by reducing the period where the fixing of the period was a matter for discretion of the commission.¹⁷

crec may be modified in favor of one who has not appealed. The court on appeal may amend the judgment with respect to witness' fees²⁰ and costs,²¹ and may correct a provision as to attorney's fees.²² In a proper case, the award will be modified to permit claimant to participate in a state fund.²³ The award will be modified when based on provisions of an amendment to an act where the act as it was before amendment applies.²⁴

No amendment can be made where the award is supported by the findings;²⁵ and where the commission has discretion in making an award, and its decision is supported by evidence, the court will not modify it.²⁶ Where there is a conflict of evidence on the question of notice of injury to the employer, without which notice no award could be made, and the arbitrator made an award but his finding was that notice was not given, the judgment cannot be modified on the ground that since an award was made, the "not" must be regarded as a clerical error, but must be reversed.²⁷

Where there is prejudicial error, the court will reverse a compensation award or decision.

The court will reverse a compensation award or decision where there is prejudicial error,²⁹ where a jurisdictional prerequisite is lacking,³⁰ where there is a failure to make proper and necessary findings,³¹ the findings are erroneous³² or insufficient,³³ or where the award is ambiguous.³⁴ evidence,⁶² or where the findings are insufficient.⁶³ The decision may be set aside where the compensation authorities disregarded evidence having probative force.⁶⁴

An award may be vacated where the parties so stipulate and their stipulation is supported by the record,⁶⁵ or where there is a confession of error,⁶⁶ or where, after having taken evidence, the board adds parties defendant and makes an award against them on the evidence previously taken.⁶⁷

Annulment of an award has the same effect as a reversal of a judgment.⁶⁸ Unless otherwise ordered on the annulment or setting aside of an award, the case goes back to the compensation authorities for reconsideration.⁶⁹ Where the court sets aside an award without further direction, the defeated party is entitled to a retrial of the issues before the commission.⁷⁰ Where an award is made by a deputy commissioner and is modified by the board on appeal, if the award of the board is set aside the award by the deputy commissioner remains in force.⁷¹ An award against an employer, over whom the commission had never acquired jurisdiction, will not be set aside or annulled on application of insurer of another employer.⁷² Where the act provides for arbitration by consent or order, and limits the questions before the arbitrator to the amount of compensation unless other issues are expressly referred, on an employer's consenting to arbitrate without referring any questions the only issue is the amount of compensation so that on review the award cannot be cancelled, although the court finds that the injury did not arise out of, or in the course of, the employment.⁷³ Where it is necessary on appeal materially to reduce an award, a finding and approval of attorney's fees should be vacated so that it may be adjusted in connection with the reduced award.⁷⁴

In a proper case, the court may dismiss the proceeding or the appeal.

Where an award is vacated as a matter of law, the court may dismiss the proceeding.⁷⁵ Where there is no evidence to support the finding of a commission on which it concluded it had jurisdiction the court, on appeal from the award, may dismiss the proceeding.⁷⁶ It has been held that the court cannot, on review, dismiss the proceeding for lack of evidence to support the findings of the commission,

Remand or nonsuit

Plaintiff who prosecuted suit for compensation in forma pauperis suffered no loss from being nonsuited instead of having case remanded, since only difference, ordinarily, between nonsuit and remand of case is with respect to costs involved in bringing new suit.

but should remand it for further hearing.⁷⁷ Where a contest of an award has been transferred from one court to another the court from which it was transferred cannot thereafter dismiss the contest.⁷⁸ Where the parties to a review have stipulated for the return of the record to the commission for amendment, the cause is no longer before the reviewing court so that its order quashing the writ of certiorari and dismissing the suit is void.⁷⁹

Where the court is authorized to try the case de novo on appeal from a decision of the compensation authorities, it may dismiss the action⁸⁰ without prejudice.⁸¹ An employer, having brought suit to set aside an award, and the employee or claimant having filed a cross action, the employer cannot take voluntary dismissal or nonsuit.⁸²

In a proper case, the court will dismiss the appeal.⁸³ A statute providing that an appeal shall be determined within a stated time has been construed as merely directory, so that the failure to determine the appeal within the stated time does not effect an automatic dismissal of the appeal.⁸⁴ The dismissal of an appeal without prejudice does not bar a subsequent appeal.⁸⁵

§ 788. Remand

On review of compensation proceedings, the court may remand the case subject to statutory limitations on the exercise of such power.

Whether a cause may be remanded on review depends in large measure on the provisions of the statutes.⁸⁶ The power to remand to the board or commission may be implied⁸⁷ and it has been held that the cause may be remanded for new trial where justice requires it even though the statute does not expressly authorize it.⁸⁸

Where the act provides that on appeal the court may grant or refuse compensation, or increase or diminish an award, it has been held without jurisdiction to remand,⁸⁹ and where it must affirm, reverse, or modify the award it is without power to remand without reversal or modification.⁹⁰ However, where the power of a court on review of an award is limited to affirming or setting it aside in toto, it has been held that the effect of an order setting aside an award is to remand it to the board or commission for new trial.⁹¹ Where the court is authorized to remand only on setting aside the order or award, it may not remand where the setting aside of the award is not proper.⁹² Where the act requires the court to remit for further hearing on sustaining appellant's exception to the award, it is erroneous to fail to do so.⁹³

Where the statute specifies the grounds for remand, the court may not remand on any other ground.⁹⁴ Under some statutes, the court cannot remand for the taking of additional testimony where there has been a full hearing and a final award.⁹⁵ It has been held that the court cannot remand for a new hearing on the ground that the findings are against the weight of the evidence.⁹⁶

Effect on jurisdiction

(1) When workmen's compensation proceeding was remanded from superior court, where it was pending on appeal, to industrial commission, superior court surrendered its jurisdiction, and industrial commission acquired jurisdiction for all purposes, notwithstanding order stated that proceeding was remanded for specific purpose.

N.C.—Butts v. Montague Bros., 179 S.E. 799, 208 N.C. 186.

(2) Court cannot remand and at the same time, by its order remanding to the commission and requiring it to certify the record with its findings back to the court, retain jurisdiction over the cause.

Compared with recommitment to master

Superior court had the same right to recommit a compensation proceeding to the industrial board for further findings that it would have in equity to recommit a case to a master.

Limits of rule

Rule that court may not remand a workmen's compensation case for the taking of additional or newly discovered evidence has no application to the taking of additional testimony by joint board on a reconsideration of an issue made necessary by the board's having proceeded on a fundamentally wrong basis in a prior hearing.

Appellant not at fault

Where opponents in compensation proceeding appealed from award of deputy commissioner, and, after opponents' attorney and department of labor and industry had vainly requested department's reporter several times to file transcript of testimony taken before commissioner, department affirmed award because of opponents' failure to file transcript, award was vacated and case remanded to department for hearing on testimony taken by reporter or before department, since opponents had been deprived of their day in court. Mich.—Wilcox v. Heinz, 287 N.W. 756, 275 Mich. 649.

Transcript unavailable

On a proper showing that a transcript from the industrial commission, essential to final determination by the reviewing court, cannot, through no fault of the parties, be secured, the cause will be remanded for new trial.

Change in law

(1) In determining what justice requires for purpose of making proper disposition of an action brought to review an order of state industrial commission, supreme court will consider any change in law which has supervened since judgment being reviewed was rendered and recognize such a change as may affect result in trial tribunal by vacating order or award without prejudice in order that cause may be remanded and commission may be free to act by dealing appropriately with controversy in light of law declared in a similar case subsequent to order or award under review.

As discussed infra § 789, unless its power is restricted by statute, the reviewing court may enter final judgment and need not remand the case where no facts remain to be developed or determined, but a remand is necessary where the facts have not been fully developed or a matter remains open for determination,³² and it has been held that the court should not make final disposition of the case where it appears that, through inadvertence or otherwise, the facts have not been fully developed.³³ Where claimant has failed to establish his right to compensation, the case may nevertheless be remanded where it appears probable that on a further hearing he will be able to do so,³⁴ but a remand will not be ordered where it does not appear that claimant has additional evidence to offer.³⁵ On the other hand, it has been held error to remand a case to give claimant who failed to prove his case another opportunity to do so,³⁶ and the case should not be remanded to give the employer or insurer another opportunity to present evidence which should have been presented at the original hearing.³⁷ Where a judgment

Disagreement of medical experts

(1) Where determination of paramount issue in compensation case depended on testimony of physicians with respect to hernia, and physicians were numerically equally divided in opinion as to whether claimant had a hernia, and there was a paucity of lay testimony, court of appeal was justified in declining to adjudicate issue on employer's appeal and would set aside judgment for claimant and remand case for further proceedings.

La.—Mason v. Southern Kraft Corp., App., 6 So.2d 757.

(2) In suit by employee to recover compensation the mere fact that medical experts were equally divided in their opinion as to nature and extent of injuries is not a sufficient reason for remanding case unless other evidence makes it impossible for the court to arrive at a proper decision.

Delay in claiming error

Where claimant, asserting a neurotic condition causing total incapacity, and the absence of suitable work, failed to file a motion to correct the finding of the commissioner, who made an award for twenty per cent disability, the case would not be remanded for the filing of such a motion, after a lapse of five years.

for plaintiff is erroneous for failure to prove a material matter he is not entitled to a remand so as to provide him with further opportunity to produce proof.³³ Where there is no evidence before the reviewing court and it appears that the judgment below was entered inadvertently, the court will remand instead of rendering judgment.³⁹

On appeal from a dismissal of a claim for compensation for lack of jurisdiction the court must, on reversal, remand for rehearing on the merits of the claim and cannot itself make an award.⁴⁰ Where claimant has been denied compensation on the ground that he is not entitled to participate in a state fund, and on appeal it appears that he has a right to participate, the cause must be remanded for determination of the amount of compensation.⁴¹ Where in proceedings under the statute the parties are entitled to a complete and final disposition of the cause, failure to determine the nature and extent of the disability, if any, necessitates remanding the cause.⁴² Where a claim was not made in time, and no excuse was pleaded, but the evidence showed incapacity which would excuse, the cause should be remanded rather than dismissed.⁴³ Where, however, the insufficiency of the excuse offered by

Where no relevant evidence has been produced to sustain the findings of the board, it is not necessary, on reversing the award, to remand the cause,⁴⁵ but it has been held that where the evidence relied on for proof of a material matter lacks legal competency, on reversal of the decision the cause must be remanded for further hearing.⁴⁶ Remand for further findings is unnecessary where the reversal is on a question of law.⁴⁷

The power to remand rests in the discretion of the court⁴⁸ and should be exercised whenever the ends of justice require such action.⁴⁹ The exercise of the power depends on the particular circumstances.⁵⁰ A remand will not be ordered where it is not necessary or will not serve the interests of justice,⁵¹ or where a remand would be useless or futile.⁵² A case will not be remanded for the finding of subsidiary facts where the evidence would not warrant a finding contrary to the general finding of the compensation authorities,⁵³ or where the result would not be affected⁵⁴ or where there is no other or additional evidence to be presented.⁵⁵ The court will not remand for a finding as to an imma-

Where the evidence would not warrant a finding contrary to the general finding of the reviewing board that compensation claimant was not a "dependent" of deceased employee, case would not be remanded to the reviewing board for the finding of subsidiary facts.

terial matter,⁵⁶ nor will it remand because of a failure to make a finding where the evidence as to the issue is undisputed or conclusive.⁵⁷ A remand should not be ordered for the taking of testimony which is essentially cumulative.⁵⁸ The court should not remand the case for the taking of additional evidence with respect to a theory advanced for the first time on appeal.⁵⁹

Where the evidence is sufficient the cause will not be remanded for further evidence,⁶⁰ nor will it be remanded for further findings where the finding, although insufficient, is right under the evidence⁶¹ or the evidence can be regarded as a finding of fact.⁶² Where the decision is correct, the case will not be remanded for more detailed findings.⁶³

The cause need not be remanded for a purely technical reason.⁶⁴ Where an improper provision for interest is separable from an award, it may be annulled without remand, and the award otherwise affirmed.⁶⁵ An act providing for review after the lapse of a year on the ground of change in the employee's condition does not authorize a remand for the purpose of obtaining proof of change since the trial.⁶⁶ Under a provision for modification of a compensation judgment or for review at any time after one year, a compensation case will not be remanded for the taking of testimony as to an alleged increase in plaintiff's wage-earning capacity since the trial, where the year has almost expired, as this would deprive judgments of all stability or value.⁶⁷ Where the rights of the parties are unaffected by the failure of a commissioner to make another a party to the proceeding, the cause need not be remanded.⁶⁸ Where findings of a referee are too meager, and the commission, while it should not have done so in the particular case, made additional findings, the correctness of which is conceded, the court need not remand the cause.⁶⁹ Where there is evidence to support the findings of the board, and additional evidence on appeal strengthens the board's decision, the case should not be remanded for further hearing.⁷⁰

Where an award is reversed and remanded, the cause stands as if the award had not been made.⁷¹ Where the court remands to the compensation authorities for more specific findings, the case is still pending in the court,⁷² but a general remand terminates the jurisdiction of the court.⁷³ The court will not consider issues as to which the case is to be remanded for the taking of further testimony.⁷⁴

Where the workmen's compensation board has found that disability ceased on a certain date and, claimant having appealed, the court concludes that the evidence is insufficient to support such a finding and remits the record to the board for the purpose of determining the correct date, and the board reviews the evidence and fixes a new termination date, the record should thereupon be returned to the court, which retains jurisdiction based on claimant's original exceptions; claimant is not required to take another appeal from the second finding.

The court may, when it remands a cause to the board for further proceedings, state the questions requiring a further hearing⁸² and give such other instructions as may be proper,⁸³ such as ordering the commission to proceed in accordance with the findings of the court,⁸⁴ or directing reopening, where refusal to reopen is fraudulent or an abuse of discretion,⁸⁵ or directing that proper notice be given of the review by the board or commission.⁸⁶ Where the commission has failed properly to apply the law

Where, on review, the court remands the cause to the board or commission for further proceedings, it has been held essential that proper instructions be given the board or commission,⁸⁸ but, in the absence of any statutory requirement, the mandate must be regulated by the facts and circumstances of the particular case.⁸⁹ A judgment recommitting the case and citing the reasons for the judgment has been held to indicate sufficiently the matters for determination.⁹⁰

denial of compensation the court may direct that an award be made,⁹² although it may not go further and direct what the award should be.⁹³ However, where the facts are not in dispute and only questions of law are involved, the court may remand with directions as to the award to be entered.⁹⁴ Where the evidence does not require a finding by the board that the accident arose out of, and in the course of, the employment, a remand with instruction to enter an award is improper.⁹⁵

Although the court may remand with directions that a finding be made on an issue, it may not instruct as to what the finding shall be,⁹⁶ unless the evidence is undisputed.⁹⁷ Where the court is authorized to determine the facts de novo, it may not remand to the compensation authorities for findings in accordance with the views of the court.⁹⁸

The court may not order the compensation authorities to enter an award against one not a party to the proceedings.⁹⁹ The board should not be ordered to consider a matter which it has already properly considered.¹

The court may, on remand, on reversing an order of the board or commission, order payment of compensation subsequent to the date of the order appealed from.² Where an appeal from a referee's order suspending payments of compensation until claimant submitted to medical examination was set aside, on remand the order should provide that payments continue until the employer petitions the board for an order directing claimant to submit to such examination.³

Mistrial. Where an award is invalid because the commission disregarded a fundamental requisite of law the award cannot be reviewed,⁴ but under a statute giving the appellate court original jurisdiction it may on review declare a mistrial and remand the cause to the commission.⁵

Motions to remand must be presented to the proper court having the power to remand,⁶ and a motion to recommit with direction to enter an award should be in writing.⁷ The motion need not be supported by affidavit.⁸ Remand will be denied where the motion for such relief is not timely made⁹ or where the showing in support of the motion is insufficient.¹⁰ Where a suit for compensation was dismissed because brought too late, a motion to remand because a prior suit was instituted, interrupting the operation of the statute, will not be granted where no showing is made in support of the averment in the motion and there is nothing in the record to support such action by the court.¹¹ An application for a change in the award because of changed conditions should be made in the lower court and not by way of a motion for remand.¹²

Notice. Where the appellate court remands for further hearing, failure to give the employer notice of such disposition is immaterial where he appears at the hearing under the order and introduces evidence.¹³

§ 789. Judgment or Decree

Under the practice in some jurisdictions, the court reviewing a compensation order or award may enter a final judgment.

In some jurisdictions the reviewing courts may, on appeal from decisions of the board or commission, render final judgment¹⁴ and issue execution.¹⁵ In other jurisdictions the reviewing court may, where it does not modify, reverse, remand, or set aside a decision of the board or commission, render judgment in accordance with it,¹⁶ but on reversal, modification, or setting aside of the decision it must remand, having no power in such a case to enter a judgment.¹⁷ Where the compensation act requires, as a prerequisite to the issuance of writ of certiorari, a bond by the employer conditioned on payment of the award and costs, the reviewing court cannot enter a money judgment and order execution to issue thereon,¹⁸ but may only confirm or set aside the award and enter a decision justified by law, or remand for further proceedings.¹⁹

Unless its power to do so is restricted by statute, the court may enter final judgment and need not remand the case where no facts remain to be determined or developed.²⁰ Thus, where the only questions involved are questions of law, and a determination of them finally disposes of the case, the court should enter judgment.²¹ However, as discussed supra § 788, a remand is ordinarily necessary where questions of fact remain to be determined. Where the court on appeal hears additional testimony, it may grant an award without re-submitting the case to the compensation board.²²

Provision of workmen's compensation act that a compensation order shall become effective when filed in office of commission and unless reversed or modified on appeal shall become final at expiration of thirty days thereafter means that a certified copy of compensation order as affirmed, modified, or reversed by circuit court shall be filed in office of industrial commission and shall become final unless reversed or modified by supreme court on an appeal taken within thirty days after entry of judgment of circuit court.

The judgment on appeal should not invade the exclusive province of the compensation authorities.²³ The reviewing court has been held to be without authority, on an appeal from an award, to enter a final judgment pursuant to a settlement between the parties not approved by the compensation authorities.²⁴ The court may not make an award where the board never made findings of fact and rulings of law as required by the act,²⁵ or direct an award of compensation on review of an order of the commission dismissing a claim on the ground that it had no jurisdiction,²⁶ or enter a judgment or decree against an insolvent subcontractor where the cause was never put at issue as to him and no decree was asked against him in the trial court.²⁷ The judgment must not attempt to adjudicate the rights of one not a party to the appeal.²⁸ A compensation case cannot be finally determined on appeal where the appellate court is unable to determine whether the trial court under a proper construction of the statute would have held claimant's evidence sufficient to establish his claim.²⁹ Where on appeal the jury's verdict increases the award, but is unsupported by evidence, the court may properly render judgment notwithstanding the verdict.³⁰

Under some statutes, the court on affirming an award is not authorized to enter a money judgment,³¹ whereas under other statutes, the court is required to do so.³² It has been held that on appeal from the rejection of a claim, the court, on determining that claimant is entitled to an award, should determine the amount of the award,³³ but in other jurisdictions, the court is without power to make an award and must remit the matter to the compensation authorities.³⁴

Where a party dies after the submission of the appeal, the court may enter its decision nunc pro tunc as of the date of the submission.³⁵ Where the court has no jurisdiction over the case, its judgment is void.³⁶

Where determination of constitutionality of statute increasing rate of compensation was pending in supreme court, superior court, in affirming compensation award under such statute, provided that no execution should issue for any amount in excess of previously established rate until after decision of supreme court with provision that, if act were found to be unconstitutional, judgment should be opened as to all amounts in excess of compensation payable under prior statute.

clusion of the court on each specific question before it.³⁹ In some jurisdictions the judgment must follow the form of a decree in equity,⁴⁰ and must be such as the record requires.⁴¹

Under the various statutes and practice, it has been held that it is not necessary that a judgment affirming an award repeat the terms of the award.⁴² While the court should rule on each exception, a general affirmance is in effect a ruling on each and every exception to the findings of fact and conclusions of law.⁴³ The recital of the award in a judgment of affirmance is not prejudicial error.⁴⁴ Where the award is enforceable only through appropriate proceedings in court, a mere affirmance without the essentials of a judgment of the court is improper.⁴⁵ A judgment of reversal need not contain a recital that there was prejudicial error in order to be effective.⁴⁶ It is proper to order in the final decree continuation of the rate of weekly payment subject to the provisions of the compensation act.⁴⁷ On appeal from the bureau in a compensation proceeding the determination of the court need not be supported by specific findings of facts which may be submitted and considered on review to sustain it;⁴⁸ but a finding of permanent incapacity, where merely a conclusion of the jury drawn from previous findings, may be disregarded.⁴⁹ It has been held not erroneous to render a judgment for a lesser amount than the verdict authorizes where, on the indication of the court that it thought the verdict excessive on the question of incapacity, claimant filed a remittitur of a portion of the percentage of incapacity and judgment was rendered accordingly.⁵⁰

Provision for compensation paid. The judgment on appeal should be made with respect to previous payments made because of the injury.⁵¹

Lump sum awards. On appeal from an order of the commission denying compensation, a lump or fixed sum should not be awarded,⁵² but where such an award is made the judgment cannot be collaterally attacked.⁵³

Interest. A judgment affirming an award may properly provide for interest thereon.⁵⁴

Certification of judgment to board. The judgment should provide for notification thereof to the board and direct it to enter an award accordingly,⁵⁵ but failure to certify it to the board is error which may be corrected by the court.⁵⁶ Where, on appeal

Reopening and revising. The judgment on appeal may provide for reopening the matter as justice may require⁵⁸ for change in conditions⁵⁹ or for showing in the trial court a cessation of the disability for which compensation is awarded on appeal.⁶⁰ Where a commission is vested with discretion to reopen a case, the reviewing court cannot order the case reopened.⁶¹ However, a statute authorizing a board to review its decision has been held not applicable to a court so as to give it revisory authority over its judgment in a suit to set aside an award,⁶² but its power is the same and subject to the same limitations as in other cases,⁶³ and where the statute fails so to provide, it cannot reserve revisory power over its judgment,⁶⁴ which,

Compliance presumed

Supreme court must assume that on rehearing after it has set aside commission's award commission will properly consider facts as set forth by supreme court.

Ariz.—Matlock v. Industrial Commission, 215 P.2d 612, 70 Ariz. 25.

Failure to reconsider issue

Where industrial board denied award for death benefit and appellate division reversed decision and remitted matter for further consideration and board granted an award solely on assumed direction of appellate division without reconsidering issues, decision of appellate division affirming award was reversed and matter was remitted to board for a determination of issues.

N.Y.—Bergman v. Mergenthaler Linotype Co., 61 N.E.2d 513, 294 N.Y. 204.

Death of claimant

Under statute providing that court must enter final judgment when a party to an action dies after a decision but before entry of final judgment, and appeals under workmen's compensation law shall be subject to law and practice applicable to appeals in civil actions, a right to death benefits vested in deceased employee's widow when supreme court reversed decision of industrial board that claim was not compensable and remitted claim, and award was payable to her estate on her death.

N.Y.—Walsh v. Tidewater Oil Sales Co., 33 N.Y.S.2d 874, 263 App.Div. 514, appeal denied In re Grave's Estate, 35 N.Y.S.2d 280, 264 App. Div. 745, motion dismissed 43 N.E. 2d 79, 288 N.Y. 679, appeal dismissed 53 N.E.2d 847, 292 N.Y. 509.

tion board's authority is limited to doing so.⁶⁸ In such case, the appeal is regarded as still pending before the court, so that where the board makes a second award no new appeal is necessary.⁶⁹ Where, on insurer's appeal, the cause was remitted to the industrial accident board because of the diminution of the record, the board had no authority to make a new finding, but simply to complete the record according to the facts and return it, "diminution of the record" meaning incompleteness in the statement of the proceedings.⁷⁰ A further hearing must be held and evidence received where necessary in order to comply with the mandate.⁷¹ On remand for determination of the extent of permanent partial disability the commission need not determine whether the maximum improvement has been reached,⁷² and the percentage of disability may be determined on the testimony taken at the first hearing where this is sufficient.⁷³

In the absence of specific directions or restriction, the compensation authorities are free to proceed as they see fit as long as their proceedings are not inconsistent with the mandate or opinion of the court.⁷⁴ The full jurisdiction of the compensation board reattaches on the setting aside of an award and a general remand of the case.⁷⁵ A judgment

Exceptions to findings

Workmen's compensation board, on making new or additional findings in a case remitted to it by a court of common pleas for that purpose, must afford parties an opportunity to file exceptions thereto, and must dispose of such exceptions if filed, before returning record to court.

Pa.—Hilton v. Edwards Memorial Church, 50 Pa. Dist. & Co. 341.

Disposition of case

Where workmen's compensation proceeding was remitted to compensation board by court of common pleas for more specific findings of fact to enable court to decide questions on appeal, referee, to whom claim was referred, was in error in concluding, as a matter of law, that claimant was not entitled to compensation and in entering an order of dismissal.

Transcript of prior hearing

Where compensation proceeding was continued after claimant's death pending appeal, by order of department of labor and industry substituting widow of claimant as party plaintiff for purpose of determining her rights as dependent and case remanded, admitting transcript of testimony by deputy commissioner, taken at first hearing when claimant was living, at hearing on claim of widow at second hearing was not error, since death abated compensation claim only in so far as claimant was concerned.

Determination by unemployment commission

On remand, industrial accident commission was free to exercise its independent judgment in evaluating setting aside an award does not prohibit the commission from reopening the case⁷⁶ or affect its jurisdiction to proceed with a determination of the rights of the parties except as it may be limited by the decision of the court.⁷⁷

Thus, the compensation board may permit an amendment of the pleadings⁷⁸ or the presentation of additional evidence,⁷⁹ may make new findings⁸⁰ and a new award,⁸¹ and may have a complete new hearing.⁸² Where a commissioner's jurisdiction is continuing, on remand to him to determine claimant's earning capacity he may enter an award for total incapacity,⁸³ and, after reversal, a board having continuing jurisdiction may again hear and determine the cause.⁸⁴

Unless required by the mandate, the compensation authorities need not receive new evidence and may proceed on the evidence previously received.⁸⁵ A repetition of the evidence presented at the original hearing is not necessary,⁸⁶ and the board has discretion as to whether or not to receive additional evidence.⁸⁷ The board may restrict the rehearing to evidence and making findings as to degree of workmen's compensation claimant's disability and his probable earnings, if any, irrespective of any determination thereof which department of employment might have made in allowing his claim for unemployment compensation for same period.

Review by new appeal

(1) Where there is a general remand, a new appeal is necessary to review the subsequent action of the board.

Pa.—Groner v. Board of Public Education of City (School Dist.) of Pittsburgh, 33 A.2d 271, 152 Pa. Super. 381.

(2) Where superior court directed department to rate claimant for disability, claimant's remedy, if dissatisfied with rating, held appeal to joint board, not petition to court for show cause order.

Wash.—Powers v. Department of Labor and Industries, 30 P.2d 983, 177 Wash. 21.

(3) Where circuit court reversed decision of industrial commission and directed that it hear additional evidence, new decision of industrial commission could be reviewed only by a new and independent writ of certiorari.

Ill.—Elles v. Industrial Commission, 30 N.E.2d 615, 375 Ill. 107.

(4) Where circuit court reversed decision of industrial commission and directed that it hear additional evidence and claimants sought a review of second award by certiorari, failure of court to enter a new case on docket as provided by court rules did not affect jurisdiction of court, since requirements are merely directory to clerk.

certain issues.⁸⁸ After remand it is discretionary with the lower tribunal to allow time for further investigation with the possible view of taking additional testimony on a disputed point.⁸⁹ A claimant, on a second hearing before the industrial commission on remand after review by the supreme court, is not entitled to introduce further testimony on the question of failure to give notice of the original order, having waived the failure by not giving evidence thereon on the first motion for rehearing.⁹⁰

Where the remand is for a finding on an issue, a rehearing is not required where the evidence on the issue was sufficiently developed at the earlier hearing;⁹¹ the compensation authorities may consider the evidence presented at the prior hearing, and where no new evidence is offered may base the finding solely on such evidence.⁹² A member of the commission who joined in the decision that was set

sue determined on appeal is not to be reconsidered and redetermined by the compensation authorities.² The compensation board may not disregard adjudications on review by changing findings of fact on the same evidence,³ nor may a commissioner proceed further after a decree enjoining enforcement of his award.⁴

After a judgment on appeal establishing claimant's right to compensation, the board cannot reverse or deny that right,⁵ but such a ruling requires an award fixing the amount to which claimant is entitled,⁶ although the board or commission may vary the amount of the award⁷ or award a lump sum.⁸ Where a reviewing court renders judgment that claimant is entitled to participate in a compensation fund, the commission must recognize the judgment as requiring some compensation for disability and must inquire into the extent of the disability.⁹ A decision of the court on a common-law certiorari declaring proceedings and order of the board to be void is not res judicata of matters presented on a second claim before the board,¹⁰ and a reversal on an issue of employment is not res judicata on the question of which of two companies was the insurance carrier.¹¹ On reversal and remand for lack of evidence of earning capacity the board should not deny any further compensation.¹²

It has been held that an appeal from its decision deprives the commission of any further power beyond carrying into execution the judgment of the appellate tribunal.¹³ Where the judgment of the court is final unless it remands with directions, in the absence of directions the board or commission cannot grant a new hearing.¹⁴ Where the board or commission has found that disability has ceased before the hearing and award, which is affirmed on appeal, the affirmance has been held to be final so as to preclude further hearings by the board or commission.¹⁵ Decisions on review being mandatory and not advisory, the commission cannot, as a general rule, reopen a case after its award has been affirmed, and reach a conclusion at variance with its original view and the law as stated by the court affirming the award.¹⁶ However, in a proper case, the compensation authorities may reopen the case after affirmance;¹⁷ an affirmance of an award does not preclude the reopening of the case on a question not before the appellate court.¹⁸ After remand, the compensation authorities may reopen the case on the ground of fraud or mistake¹⁹ or may modify the award.²⁰

Where the matter has been determined on appeal, the board's continuing authority to change or modify its awards is to some extent terminated,²¹ and may be exercised only where there is a change in the situation after the appeal.²² In some jurisdictions the board has power and jurisdiction to reopen a claim after a reversal and dismissal, and to take new evidence and make new findings;²³ and the board may, in a proper case, reopen the claim and grant reformation of the insurance policy.²⁴

Motion to require further proceeding. After reversal of an award and dismissal of the claim, on motion of the court to determine if the board may reopen the claim for a rehearing, and asking that it be directed to do so, it is not the proper duty of the court to advise the industrial board as to its duty in the matter of a rehearing of the claim.²⁵

Notice. Further proceedings before the board or commission require that proper notice be given the parties,²⁶ although notice has been held unnecessary where the questions have been fully determined.²⁷

Review of second award. Where a second award is made in accordance with an order of the reviewing court vacating the original award and remanding the cause, one who feels aggrieved by the second award must institute a new and separate action to review it,²⁸ and cannot question it by appealing from the judgment remanding the original award.²⁹

Proceedings after reversal of second award. Where the original award was vacated and the second award was reversed, the industrial commission had jurisdiction to hear the cause anew in accordance with a supreme court mandate.³⁰

§ 791. Rehearing

Ordinarily, the reviewing court has the power to rehear and modify its judgment prior to the time that it becomes final.

Ordinarily the court reviewing a compensation award or order has the power, in its discretion, to modify its judgment prior to the time it becomes final by the expiration of the term or the time to appeal.³¹ It has been held that the time within which the court may set aside its judgment is not extended by a motion for a new trial.³² Under some statutes, the court may not modify its judgment, even prior to the expiration of the time to appeal.³³

A petition for rehearing on the ground that the court overlooked a finding of the board will be dismissed where it appears that, while the particular matter was in fact mentioned by the board, there was no finding as to it.³⁴ A rehearing need not be granted for the purpose of correcting an error in the percentage of earning capacity allowed, as this may be corrected without doing so,³⁵ by sup-

After expiration of term

Where, in a compensation case, a rehearing before compensation court is waived and appeal had direct to district court, trial is de novo in district court, and court has authority to try and determine cause in equity, so that statutes vesting district court with power to vacate or modify its own judgments, after term in which judgments are made, are applicable to workmen's compensation cases.

Neb.—Miller v. Schlereth, 36 N.W. 2d 497, 151 Neb. 33.

Default judgment

(1) Rule that judgment cannot be opened after end of term does not apply to judgment entered in statutory proceeding or by default, and, hence, court was not precluded from opening default judgment on appeal from compensation award because term at which it was entered had expired at time petition to open was filed.

(2) In workmen's compensation proceeding, setting aside default judgment was not abuse of discretion where legal defense existed that statute containing schedule of awards on which default judgment was entered did not apply to proceeding.

Wash.—Yeck v. Department of Labor and Industries, 176 P.2d 359, 27 Wash.2d 92.

Writ of error coram nobis

Alleged error of judge of superior court in dismissing certiorari proceedings to review decision of industrial commission in denying compensation under workmen's compensation act, for want of prosecution, was an error of law and not of fact, and therefore alleged error could not be corrected at subsequent term on motion in nature of a writ of error coram nobis.

plemental opinion.³⁶ A rehearing for newly discovered evidence is properly denied where such evidence would not have been conclusive.³⁷ Rehearing will not be granted to correct a judgment by including therein a provision required by law where such provision is contained in the judgment by operation of law.³⁸

§ 792. Successive Appeals

As a general rule, the law as decided on an appeal governs on a subsequent appeal.

Although there is some authority to the contrary,³⁹ the rule that the law as laid down on a first appeal is the law of the case and governs subsequent appeals is generally held to apply to appeals from awards in compensation cases.⁴⁰ Matters not in any way considered on the first appeal are properly considered on a second appeal.⁴¹ Where the statute requires the court to remit the record for further hearing on reversal of an award, it need not continue to remit on a subsequent appeal from the board.⁴²

15. PROCEEDINGS FOR FURTHER REVIEW

§ 793. Nature and Form of Remedy

A further review in workmen's compensation cases must be in accordance with statutory requirements, and generally it is by appeal as in civil actions or proceedings.

A further review after a court review in workmen's compensation cases must be in accordance with statutory requirements, if any.⁴³ Under vary-

Mich.—Samels v. Goodyear Tire & Rubber Co., 35 N.W.2d 265, 323 Mich. 251.

Sufficiency of evidence

Former determination by supreme court of appeals that evidence then in case did not warrant an award of compensation became "law of the case," precluding allowance of any compensation on claim in absence of additional evidence as, with that already in case, would establish claim asserted.

W.Va.—Rapp v. State Compensation Com'r, 27 S.E.2d 588, 126 W.Va. 227.

Implied decision

Where former appeal in compensation proceeding necessarily involved question whether workman was engaged in employment at time of injury, and such question was impliedly decided against employer, although not discussed, it would not be reviewed again on subsequent appeal.

Tex.—Traders & General Ins. Co. v. Powell, 110 S.W.2d 559, 130 Tex. 375.

Refusal to permit autopsy

Where, under law of case, question of liability in workmen's compensation proceeding could not be further litigated, award to which petitioners were entitled under law of case could not be denied because petitioners refused to permit an autopsy.

Cal.—Morrison v. Industrial Accident Commission, 109 P.2d 767, 42 C.A.2d 685.

Appeal from denial of compensation

Statute relating to appeals from orders of industrial commission requiring commission to pass on every issue raised in claim and, if claim is denied, to state grounds on which it was denied, evidenced purpose to avoid multiplicity of appeals by requiring appeal to disclose all reasons for denial of claim so that claimant's right to participate in fund may be settled finally in one appeal.

ing constitutional provisions, compensation acts, and codes and rules of procedure, judgments and decrees of the courts on review of decisions of compensation boards or commissions are regarded as judgments or decrees in suits or proceedings at law or equity within the terms of a practice act providing for appeals from judgments in such cases,⁴⁴ or they are considered the same as, or in the same category as, judgments or decrees of the court in civil cases with respect to their further review in the appellate courts, or the further review is to be taken in the same manner and subject to the same limitations as is provided in civil actions.⁴⁵

The remedy for further review has been held to be by appeal,⁴⁶ writ of error,⁴⁷ on exceptions,⁴⁸ or certiorari;⁴⁹ and under some acts which do not provide a statutory procedure for appeal, a petition to transfer has been held to perform the functions of a writ of error and to be sufficient to present the case to the higher court for consideration.⁵⁰ The right of further review by appeal or writ of error has been held to exist regardless of the fact that the compensation act makes no provision for such review.⁵¹

Under some acts, further appellate proceedings in compensation cases are required to conform to the practice in equity, except that questions of fact are not open to review as they are in an ordinary appeal in equity;⁵² and further appellate review on questions of law may be obtained only by appeal, and not by bill of exceptions.⁵³ Under other acts and rules of practice a writ of error is held not a

The jurisdiction of the higher court may be questioned at any stage of the proceedings on a further appeal from a reviewing court in a compensation case; jurisdiction may not be conferred on the higher court by consent.

On a further appeal from a reviewing court in a compensation case, the question of jurisdiction of the higher court over the subject matter may be raised at any stage of the proceedings.⁶¹ Jurisdiction may not be conferred on the higher court by consent.⁶² In accordance with the rules applicable in civil actions generally, as discussed in Appeal and Error § 41, the lower court must have had jurisdiction to make the decision appealed from in order for the appellate court to have jurisdiction.⁶³ A decree which the reviewing court in a compensation case was without jurisdiction to make cannot be appealed from,⁶⁴ and the higher court is not bound to give it any effect.⁶⁵

A higher court does not have jurisdiction of a further appeal in a compensation case where the

Insanity of party. On further review by writ of error of an award of a compensation board or commission, the higher court has no jurisdiction to determine a question as to the insanity of a party to the writ for the purpose of appointing a guardian ad litem for him.⁷⁰

§ 795. Decisions Reviewable

- a. In general
- b. Final decisions

a. In General

Ordinarily, an appeal or other further review may be taken in a proper case from a judgment or decree of a court reviewing an award or decision of a compensation board, bureau, or commission, provided the judgment or decision appealed or otherwise reviewed is a judicial decision.

As a general rule, an appeal or other further review may be taken in a proper case from a judgment or decree of a court reviewing an award or decision of a compensation board, bureau, or commission.⁷¹ Where, however, a compensation act is regarded as providing only a limited appeal to a lower court, no appeal will lie from the decisions of such court.⁷²

In accordance with the rule applicable in civil actions generally, as discussed in Appeal and Error § 47, a further review can only be taken from a judicial decision.⁷³ A mere decision as to claim-

New trial

An order granting new trial in compensation proceeding on ground that court erred in admitting testimony over objection of claimant was at most an "error of law" and not an "abuse of discretion" so as to be appealable.

commission, for purposes of an appeal from judgment of court.

N.J.—Wedgest v. Globe Porcelain Co., 15 A.2d 760, 125 N.J.Law 438.

(3) Where employee did not claim a review of either decision of single member of board in favor of employer's insurer filed in different years, it was within jurisdiction of superior court to enter decree based on such decisions, but appeal would not lie from superior court decree.

Mass.—Rocha's Case, 14 N.E.2d 133, 300 Mass. 121.

73. Time judicial status arises

A perfected appeal from industrial commission to court under workmen's compensation act confers jurisdiction for first time in judicial department of state government and it is then regarded as having originated in court and becomes for first time a judicial case with respect to right of appeal.

ant's rights, without judgment being entered, is not appealable,⁷⁴ nor is the finding of a court on review of a compensation award appealable without proper entry of a decree on the finding, even though a rescript containing the finding is duly filed.⁷⁵ Where an appeal in a compensation case is subject to the same restrictions as in civil actions, the appellate court has no jurisdiction to entertain an appeal from an inferior court on its answer to a question certified to it by the board or commission, there being in such case no judicial decision.⁷⁶

Appeals may, where permitted by the act, be taken from part of a judgment or order on review of an award.⁷⁷ Orders not part of the judgment appealed from cannot be made the basis of an appeal or cross appeal.⁷⁸ Matters which, although discussed below, had no effect on the award do not present any question for review.⁷⁹ When a judgment has been rendered it is appealable, and the fact that it is entered in the wrong judgment book does not affect the right to appeal.⁸⁰ Under some acts, a judgment of the reviewing court may be considered by a higher court on further review where the question involved is of sufficient public interest.⁸¹

Where the act provides that, where no appeal is taken from an award, the court, on the filing of a certified copy of the award, shall enter judgment

thereon, no appeal will lie from an order of such court denying a new trial after rendition of such a judgment where no appeal was taken from the award.⁸²

Notwithstanding a provision that findings of fact by the board on appeal from a decision of a referee shall be final, the court on appeal from the decision of the board may reverse the board on its finding where the board treated the appeal from the referee as involving a question of law and, hence, could not itself make any separate findings.⁸³

A refusal by a court to allow a writ of certiorari to review a determination of a compensation board or bureau is not subject to review by a higher court where the exercise by the lower court of its right to review by certiorari is purely discretionary, even though an appeal provided by statute has not been taken from the determination of the board or bureau.⁸⁴ Certiorari will not lie to review an order entered by the reviewing court with the consent of the party seeking the further review affirming the award or decision of the compensation board or bureau.⁸⁵ The higher court will not entertain a petition for certiorari to review a decision in which the lower court, in determining the compensability of the injury, properly construed and correctly applied to the evidence a decision of the higher court construing the statute involved.⁸⁶

Matter held not separate award

Where judgment remanded case to commissioner to consider motion to correct commissioner's findings, effect of commissioner's action on motion was to correct record of appeal which was already pending in higher court, and ruling was not a separate and independent award requiring another appeal in order to present case therein.

b. Final Decisions

As a general rule, the decision of a lower court on review of an award or decision of a compensation board or

Court unable to correct own error

An employee was not precluded from maintaining certiorari to review order of common pleas court remanding compensation proceeding to compensation bureau for purpose of joining employer's partner as a party, on ground that order did not finally adjudicate parties' rights, since certiorari will lie where tribunal cannot correct its own error, and common pleas court lost jurisdiction by remanding case.

or reverses it,⁹² or which dismisses an appeal from the award of the compensation commission⁹³ or a suit to set aside an award or decision of a compensation board or commission,⁹⁴ is final and appealable.

Under some acts, a judgment or decision of a reviewing court which reverses or sets aside an award or decision of a compensation board or commission and remands the case for further proceedings with power to make a different award, so that the prevailing party before the board or commission loses the benefit of the award or decision in his favor, is regarded as final and subject to further appeal.⁹⁵ Under other acts, an order or de-aside the award or decision of the board or commission and remands the case with directions to the board or commission to make a certain award,² or for action consistent with the opinion of the court,³ or where it remands the case to the board with directions to make a distinct finding with respect to a particular matter, which remand is erroneous because the finding ordered is immaterial and unnecessary in view of another finding of fact by the board.⁴

Where the question is one wholly of law, so that it is not necessary that the record be remitted for the entry of the only possible order under the ruling of the court, the fact that it does remit the record for entry of a modified award will not render its order any the less final and appealable.⁵ An appeal from an order of remand has been permitted where the parties cannot go outside of the agreed facts in the presentation of their cause and a further hearing by the compensation commission would be inconvenient, expensive, and futile.⁶ An order which merely remands the case to the board or commission with directions to make an award in compliance with the requirements of the statutes by separating its findings of law and fact is not final and appealable.⁷

A decision of the court confirming the order of the board or commission, made under directions of the court on a former review is reviewable.⁸ It has also been held that a court order remanding a workmen's compensation case to the compensation board or commission for further proceedings is final and appealable where a statute requires the reviewing court either to affirm, reverse, or modify the decision of the commission and, hence, the remanding order is without authority.⁹ An order of a compensation board remanding the record to a referee for the taking of additional testimony is interlocutory only, and where it has been affirmed on appeal a further appeal may not be taken to a higher court.¹⁰

After the cause has been reconsidered by the compensation board or commission and its ultimate award or decision sustained on review, proceedings for further review bring up the entire record, including the order of the first reviewing court remanding the cause, as discussed infra § 803.

Where a judgment dismissing a workmen's compensation claimant's attempted appeal from an award of a compensation board has become final because not appealed from, the higher court does not have jurisdiction to consider whether the judgment is erroneous, but it will consider the effect of such judgment.¹¹

Postponement of finality. A motion for new trial postpones the finality of the judgment until overruled or until a prescribed time after it is filed.¹²

§ 796. Right of Review

An appeal or other authorized form of review may be taken from a judgment or decree of a court reviewing an award or decision in a compensation case by a party in interest who is aggrieved or adversely affected by the judgment or decree; but, ordinarily, one who is not a party, or who is not aggrieved or adversely affected by the judgment or decision in the lower court cannot appeal therefrom.

In general, an appeal or other appropriate form of review may be taken from the judgment or decree of a court reviewing an award or decision in a compensation case by a party in interest who is a person aggrieved or may be adversely affected by the judgment or decree;¹³ but one who is not a

Erroneous scope of review

Where court applied erroneous scope of review, in that it examined the record to determine whether there was sufficient evidence to support board's conclusions rather than whether there had been capricious disregard of competent evidence, its order of remission for further findings consistent with its opinion was appealable.

party in the lower court,¹⁴ or who has not been aggrieved or adversely affected by the judgment or decision in the lower court¹⁵ cannot appeal therefrom. Where the losing party is allowed a specified number of days within which to appeal from the judgment or decision in the first reviewing court, he is entitled to it as a matter of right, and neither the first reviewing court nor the compensation board or commission may take any proceedings which deprive him of that right.¹⁶

A party is entitled to except to the judgment rendered against him in the lower court;¹⁷ but one against whom the claim for compensation was originally filed, but against whom an award was not made, and who was not a party to the cause on appeal to the lower court, may not urge exceptions to the judgment rendered.¹⁸ A claimant is not entitled to a review of a judgment affirming a dismissal by a board or commissioner of a hearing on a claim not authorized by statute.¹⁹ Where the court on appeal decides which of two insurers is to be liable for compensation, the aggrieved insurer may have this determination reviewed.²⁰

An appeal from a judgment on an award may, in a proper case, be taken by the board or commission.²¹ Where the board or commission had no authority to intervene in an appeal from an award on which the reviewing court made an award against insurer, it has no right to appeal from the judgment of the reviewing court.²² Where, however, the board was a party to the appeal below, it has the same right to further review as any party in other civil actions.²³

The action of the court below on appeal is not reviewable on further appeal as to a claimant who has filed no cross appeal.²⁴ Where the commission decides adversely to a party who takes an appeal therefrom, but on appeal by another party the award is reversed, no appeal from the reversal can be had by the party failing to appeal from the decision of the commission.²⁵ Where only the insurance carrier, and not the employer, appealed from the award of a referee, subsequent appeals of the employer are nullities.²⁶

Under some acts, codes, and rules of procedure, persons who participated in the trial of the case are denied the right of appeal by writ of error.²⁷

Absence of formal order. A person prosecuting an appeal has been held to waive a purely procedural defect, such as the failure in the lower court to enter a formal order, and thereafter such appeal will not be disregarded as a nullity on the ground that it was taken from a nonexistent order.²⁸

Unauthorized joinder. The right of a party to have the judgment reviewed in a higher court is not prejudiced by the unauthorized or ill advised joining by another in the bill of exceptions.²⁹

Matter abandoned on appeal to lower court

N.C.—Penland v. Bird Coal Co., 97 S.E.2d 432, 246 N.C. 26.

On voir dire

(1) Statement made by juror on voir dire examination concerning matter whether employee had notified employer of accident and not objected to at time statement was made, was not of harmful nature and its effect could have been cured by proper instruction by court.

Tex.—Texas Emp. Ins. Ass'n v. Kennedy, Civ.App., 303 S.W.2d 440, error refused no reversible error.

(2) Disclosure by prospective juror on voir dire examination, in response to questions of counsel, even though procedure was irregular, could not serve as basis for reversal in absence of timely objection.

Tex.—Texas Emp. Ins. Ass'n v. Schanen, Civ.App., 263 S.W.2d 614.

Failure to submit judgment to attorney general

Judgment could not be challenged for failure to comply with statute directing that no certificate of judgment shall be placed on record until it has been submitted to attorney general, where no effort was made in trial court to correct its journal in accordance with requirements of statute.

Ohio.—Lemmon v. Industrial Commission, App., 63 N.E.2d 845.

Failure to file cross action

Where employee relying on erroneous assumption that county court lacked jurisdiction to try suit to set aside an award of compensation by industrial accident board, did not file cross action in county court seeking to recover compensation, or introduce any evidence tending to show his right thereto, judgment setting aside award could not be reversed, notwithstanding contention that, if given opportunity, employee could by competent evidence establish his right to compensation.

Tex.—Morris v. Maryland Cas. Co., Civ.App., 130 S.W.2d 1080.

Fraud

Where defendant insurer did not plead that its insured, which was a partnership, had been guilty of fraud in withholding names of all individuals comprising partnership and that but for such fraud it would not have issued its policy, contention on appeal that there was no such partnership as jury found existed at time employee sustained fatal injury could not be sustained.

Right to appeal

Where lower court on motion of industrial commission heard workmen's compensation case on merits, failure of industrial commission to raise question of claimant's right to appeal to court of common pleas waived error in proceeding in court of common pleas.

peal appellant is restricted to the theory on which the case was tried below.³⁶

In order that points involving the action of an intermediate reviewing court may be considered on a further appeal, it may be necessary that it appear that the points have been brought to the attention of such court in a specific manner.³⁷ The objections below must be clear and point out distinctly the matter to which the party objects,³⁸ and an objection to the finding of the court below should be specific.³⁹

These rules have been applied to questions with respect to venue,⁴⁰ the capacity or right to file a claim or sue for compensation,⁴¹ the capacity to be sued,⁴² defects of parties or in the name of a party,⁴³ the addition or substitution of parties,⁴⁴ the denial by the commission of a motion to join others as defendants,⁴⁵ the pleadings,⁴⁶ lack of opportunity for oral argument before the compensation commission,⁴⁷ the failure of the jury to answer special issues,⁴⁸ the findings,⁴⁹ the judgment,⁵⁰ the propriety

Objections held preserved

Where trial court determined that evidence supported commissioner's finding of compensable injury but remanded case for further proceedings, defendants' objections to decision on this fact issue and to claimed lack of jurisdiction of trial court to remand would be preserved to them on an appeal from final judgment in case.

General denial to cross action

Party's failure to file general denial to employee's cross action in suit to set aside compensation award would not, on appeal, be treated as an admission of all material allegations in cross action, where action was tried as though a general denial had been interposed, and hence such failure would not preclude consideration of assignments of error.

Necessity for ruling

Where it did not appear that trial court ever ruled on defendant's objection to admission of claimant's wage slips and income tax returns, or that these documents had ever been admitted, defendant could not complain of erroneous admission of such documents, particularly where claimant had, without objection, testified to their contents.

Tex.—Texas Emp. Ins. Ass'n v. Moore, Civ.App., 284 S.W.2d 175, error refused no reversible error.

Request to strike or instruct not to consider

Where counsel for insurer in compensation case objected to testimony that medical witness had given and court sustained objection, but insurer made no request to strike testimony or any request for an instruction that jury not consider testimony, failure of court to take action was not reversible error.

Texas Emp. Ins. Ass'n v. Hodnett, Civ.App., 216 S.W.2d 301, refused no reversible error.

Limited objection

Objection against admission of notice of injury and claim for compensation on ground that instruments were admissible only for jurisdictional purposes, thus carrying implication that they were admissible for a limited purpose when under circumstances they were not admissible for any purpose, was insufficient to present error on appeal.

The rules precluding consideration of errors for the first time on further appeal also apply to questions with respect to the instructions,⁵⁹ the submission of issues,⁶⁰ and the failure or refusal to direct a verdict or give a peremptory instruction.⁶¹ Objections to a charge or instruction must point out distinctly the matter objected to and the grounds of the objection,⁶² and submit a correct and proper instruction;⁶³ and the failure to instruct with respect to a particular matter constitutes no ground for reversal and will not be considered by the higher court where a request for such instruction was not made in the lower court.⁶⁴ Where the lower court has attempted to submit an issue but does it defectively or erroneously, an objection and exception to the submission is sufficient to preserve the point without preparing a proper charge and request that it be given.⁶⁵ Objections to the arguments and conduct of counsel may not be raised for the first time on a further review;⁶⁶ but the failure to object to im-

Time of objection

(1) Failure to object to improper argument of counsel at time it was made was held to waive error so that it would not be considered on appeal.

Highway Ins. Underwriters v. Coleman, Civ.App., 239 S.W.2d 131, refused no reversible error—Texas Employers' Ins. Ass'n v. Peppers, Civ.App., 133 S.W.2d 165, error dismissed, judgment correct.

proper argument of counsel will not preclude a party from raising the issue on appeal, where the prejudicial effects of the argument could not have been obviated by an instruction from the court.⁶⁷

Where a compensation act provides that an intermediate appellate court should, before rendering judgment, transmit to the compensation commission, for its determination, issues which appear not to have been presented to the commission on the original hearing before it, such issues must, on proper application of a party to the action, be transmitted to the commission by the intermediate court rather than by a higher appellate court before which a review of the proceedings before the intermediate court is sought.⁶⁸

Manifest and fundamental error; jurisdiction. Under some acts and practice, the jurisdiction of the lower court must be questioned by timely objection in order for it to be considered on further appeal;⁶⁹ and it must appear that the want of jurisdiction of such court was brought to its attention by specific statements rather than by mere conclusions.⁷⁰

Generally, however, in conformity with recognized limitations and exceptions to the rule requiring objections to be made in the lower court in order for questions to be reviewable in the higher court, as discussed in Appeal and Error §§ 242, 245, it may be unnecessary for a question apparent on the record to be first raised in the court below in order to be reviewed in the higher court.⁷¹ Manifest⁷² and fundamental⁷³ error, apparent on the record, may be raised and considered for the first time in the higher court. Generally, the question of jurisdiction may be urged and considered in the higher court, regardless of whether or not it was urged be-

(2) Improper argument was held not to constitute reversible error, where no objection was made thereto until assigned as error in motion for new trial.

Request for court to act

In order to claim error because of misconduct of counsel in his argument to jury, an objection alone is not sufficient, but court must be requested to act, unless misconduct was so flagrant that no instruction would cure it.

Wash.—Seth v. Department of Labor and Industries, 152 P.2d 976, 21 Wash.2d 691.

Proper preservation of objection to argument required

Objection held not properly preserved
Tex.—American General Ins. Co. v. Dennis, Civ.App., 280 S.W.2d 620.

Change of grounds

Where counsel objected to argument of opposing counsel, but appeal brief of objection stated different grounds than were stated in objection, it could not properly be considered on appeal.

Tex.—Houston Fire & Cas. Ins. Co. v. Ford, Civ.App., 241 S.W.2d 158, refused no reversible error.

Reply arguments

Where purportedly improper arguments of plaintiff's attorney in workmen's compensation case were made in reply to arguments by defendant's attorney and no objection had been made to such arguments, impropriety of arguments could not be urged on appeal.

Tex.—Highway Ins. Underwriters v. Coleman, Civ.App., 239 S.W.2d 131, refused no reversible error.

Curable impropriety

Improper argument of such a nature that trial court could have cured impropriety if objection had been made, does not constitute reversible error where objection was made for first time in motion for new trial.

Failure to object to earlier argument

Where defendant's subsequent argument in workmen's compensation case went beyond limits reached by earlier argument, even though they contained some similar statements, failure to object to earlier argument did not preclude plaintiff from claiming error in subsequent argument.

Tex.—Loper v. Lumbermen's Lloyds, Civ.App., 269 S.W.2d 353, reversed on other grounds Lumbermen's Lloyds v. Loper, 269 S.W.2d 367, 153 Tex. 404.

69. Objection held too late

Where employers obtained an order transferring an appeal from a workmen's compensation award from court of one county to court of another and on second appeal case was transferred back to court of first county on employers' application, employers could not thereafter challenge jurisdiction of such court, particularly where employers waited until court affirmed award, since one of courts had jurisdiction of appeal.

Tex.—Commercial Standard Ins. Co. v. Robinson, Civ.App., 126 S.W.2d 1026, reversed on other grounds 151 S.W.2d 795, 137 Tex. 184.

(2) Assignment of error challenging jurisdiction of trial court because of alleged absence of showing that injury occurred in county of suit, did not assign a fundamental error which could be raised for first time on appeal.

low,⁷⁴ such as jurisdiction of the subject matter,⁷⁵ or jurisdiction dependent on the timeliness of the appeal from the compensation board or commission to the first reviewing court.⁷⁶

An alleged fatal jurisdictional defect because of the failure to file, or the insufficient filing, with the commission of the claim for compensation may not, however, be made for the first time in the higher court;⁷⁷ nor can objection be made for the first time in the higher court to the form of the award, even though urged as a jurisdictional defect.⁷⁸ The jurisdiction of the compensation director to make a compensation award on a tardy or late application for a hearing cannot be questioned for the first time on further appeal to the higher court.⁷⁹ Moreover, appellant in the higher court cannot charge error to the lower court because of its failure to hold that the compensation commission should not have taken jurisdiction of the case because the compensation commission of another state had already taken jurisdiction of it, where the question was never raised or considered in the lower court.⁸⁰

Exceptions. Under various acts and practice, exceptions are required in order to reserve questions for review on further appeal from the lower court.⁸¹ The exceptions must specify the questions to be considered on the further review.⁸² A general or single exception to the judgment of the lower court does not bring up for review the particular findings of fact or the sufficiency of the evidence to support them, but only the single question of whether the findings of fact support the judgment,⁸³ or it chal-

Necessity and sufficiency of exceptions in order to reserve questions for review in civil actions generally see Appeal and Error §§ 324-344.

Duty of lower court to rule

On appeal from award of industrial commission, reviewing court should overrule or sustain each and every exception addressed to alleged errors of law so that party aggrieved by rulings may except thereto and present question for further review.

N.C.—Worsley v. S. & W. Rendering Co., 80 S.E.2d 467, 239 N.C. 547.

Specific exceptions to general ruling

Where judge of lower court affirms all findings of fact and conclusions of law without ruling seriatim on each of specific exceptions, it is in effect a ruling on each and all such exceptions, and in such case party appealing to supreme court is not precluded from filing specific exceptions to each ruling on which he wishes to base an assignment of error.

N.C.—Stewart v. Duncan, 80 S.E.2d 764, 239 N.C. 640.

In appeal to board

A party who fails to except to a material finding of fact by referee or to his failure to find a specific fact on appeal to workmen's compensation board may not question referee's findings on appeal from common pleas to superior court.

Reasons for affirmance

Where defendant raised, in his motion for judgment non obstante veredicto, question of plaintiff's election to follow his common-law remedy, and trial court, while not expressly sustaining such contention, did set aside verdict of jury and render judgment in defendant's favor, defendant was not required to except to judgment as prerequisite to citing election of complainant to follow common-law remedy as another reason why judgment of trial court was correct one.

lenges only the conclusions of law on the facts so found.⁸⁴

Petition for review. Under some acts and practice, the higher court will not review the findings and award of the compensation commission unless the particular ground of objection is presented by petition to review the award.⁸⁵ Where there was no petition to review the award of the compensation commission, a judgment of the lower court modifying the commission's award will be reversed by the higher court for lack of jurisdiction over the subject matter by the lower court, even though that point was not raised in the lower court.⁸⁶

Motion for new trial. In some jurisdictions, errors, or designated errors, must be made the basis of a motion for a new trial as a prerequisite to their consideration by a higher court on a further review of the compensation case,⁸⁷ unless the failure to do so is excused under an exception to the rule.⁸⁸ Such a motion has been held necessary where issues were raised and considered by the first reviewing court which were not before the compensation board,⁸⁹ but not necessary where no evidence was heard by the first reviewing court⁹⁰ and the case was tried in the lower court entirely on the record certified to it by the compensation board or commission.⁹¹ Such a motion is not required in order for the higher court to review fundamental error.⁹²

Under some practice and procedure, a motion for new trial covers the whole record and is no longer a motion for raising only what were formerly matters of exception. The motion, however, is not nec-

Two questions

An exception to judgment of lower court affirming or reversing an award of workmen's compensation or a denial of a claim for workmen's compensation presents two questions, namely, are facts found sufficient to support judgment, and does any error of law appear on face of record. N.C.—Horn v. Sandhill Furniture Co., 95 S.E.2d 521, 245 N.C. 173.

Questions presented by particular exceptions

Exception to judgment was held sufficient under facts of case to bring up for review single question of law whether written contract between claimant's intestate and alleged employer established relationship of employer and employee as found by industrial commission or whether intestate was an independent contractor as contended by employer.

Defines limits of inquiry

A petition to industrial commission for review of its award of compensation defines limits of inquiry for supreme court on review of judgment of district court setting aside award and dismissing claim, and errors or objections, mentioned in complaint or assignments of error, but not specified in such petition, will not be considered by such court.

essary in order to preserve, for further review, the proceedings and evidence had before the compensation commission,⁹³ although on further appeal from the lower court on the issue of whether the award of the compensation commission was procured by fraud, the contention of appellant must be stated in a motion for new trial in order to be reviewable.⁹⁴ Under other acts and practice, a motion for new trial is not necessary in order to obtain a further review of a workmen's compensation case on the merits,⁹⁵ but in order to obtain a review of errors of law which allegedly occurred during the trial in the court below, a motion for new trial must be timely filed, assigning such errors therein.⁹⁶ Under still other acts and practice the failure to file a motion for new trial within the proper time does not affect the appellate jurisdiction of the higher court, but it does preclude a consideration of the case on the weight of the evidence.⁹⁷

All persons necessary to a final determination of the matter in issue are necessary parties on the further review of a compensation case.

In general, all persons necessary to a final determination of the matter in issue must be made parties on appeal, or other appropriate form of review, from the judgment or decree of a court reviewing an award or decision of a compensation board or commission.⁹⁸ No objection for nonjoinder of parties can be made where the nonjoinder was the fault of appellant.⁹⁹

Where the appeal in the first reviewing court was dismissed after a jury had returned a verdict for claimant and he died after giving notice of further appeal, if the higher court holds that the jury verdict was proper, judgment should be entered as of the date of the verdict so as to avoid abatement; but if the higher court holds that a new trial is required, the action should then be considered abated.¹

- a. In general
- b. Time for taking and perfecting

1. Wash.—Carl v. Department of Labor and Industries, 234 P.2d 487, 38 Wash.2d 890.

In accordance with the rules applicable in civil actions generally, as discussed in Appeal and Error §§ 425-427, an appeal from, or other form of review of, a judgment or decree in a proceeding reviewing an award or decision in a compensation case must be properly taken,² and must be in accordance with the rules of practice in the higher court.³ Under some acts and practice such appeals must be taken and prosecuted in the same manner and form and with the same effect as other appeals to the court.⁴ A motion to set aside an order of the full board, denying the employee compensation, and granting the right to appeal, has been held not proper procedure.⁵

Under various compensation acts and rules of practice, notice of appeal is required in order to take and properly perfect a further appeal to a higher court;⁶ and under some acts, codes, and rules of practice, the appeal is perfected and the higher court given jurisdiction by the proper and timely service and filing of a written notice of appeal with the lower court,⁷ or by the filing of a notice of appeal in the office of the clerk of the first reviewing court and depositing therein the docket fee required by law within the time prescribed.⁸

Where appeals are taken by serving notice of appeal on the adverse party or his attorney and the clerk of the trial court, service of such notice on all adverse parties or their attorneys is necessary to give the higher court jurisdiction of the case.⁹ Notice by the employer and insurer must be served on claimants as adverse parties, as well as on the attorney-general, appearing for the commission and the clerk of court.¹⁰ Also, notice of appeal must be served on claimants, even though they do not appear in an action to set aside an award, decided adversely to the employer, who appeals.¹¹ Where a notice of appeal is entitled "In the matter of the appeal of" claimant, it is immaterial that on appeal the title is changed to name claimant as claiming against the commission.¹²

The denial of a writ of error has the effect of leaving the judgment of the first reviewing court stand as it was entered and it is res judicata on the merits in subsequent proceedings.¹³ An appeal from a final decree of the first reviewing court has been held to vacate such decree.¹⁴ Proceedings for further review may properly be taken under the provisions of the law in force at the time of the judgment appealed from rather than under the law as subsequently amended.¹⁵

Necessity for motion for new trial. Appellants have been held not required to file a motion for new trial in a first reviewing court in order to take a further appeal,¹⁶ at least where the first reviewing court reviewed only the record of proceedings before the compensation commission and did not try the case.¹⁷

Affidavit. Where the statute requires filing of an affidavit as a prerequisite to an appeal, where judgment has been rendered against both the employer and insurer and only the employer files an affidavit, the attempted appeal of insurer cannot be heard.¹⁸

Leave to appeal has been held unnecessary where appeal is a matter of right,¹⁹ although leave to appeal has been granted in the interest of expedition where delay in awarding compensation for injury to an employee has been shocking.²⁰ A formal order allowing an appeal has been held not required in order to appeal from a judgment or decree in a proceeding to set aside a compensation order or award,²¹ and an approval of an appeal bond has been held in legal effect an allowance of an appeal from such a judgment or decree.²² Under some acts leave to appeal is required in order to appeal from an interlocutory judgment.²³

Citation. The issuance of citation has been held not to be necessary and not to be jurisdictional on appeal from a judgment or decree in a proceeding to set aside a compensation order or award,²⁴ and the issuance of citation may be waived.²⁵

Service of bill of exceptions. Where a statute or the rules of practice so require on writ of error the bill of exceptions must be served on all necessary parties to the appeal.²⁶ In the absence of statutes permitting it, service of the bill of exceptions by registered mail is improper as not in compliance with the manner prescribed.²⁷

Entry or docketing. Where, under a statute which requires entry forthwith in the appellate court, an appeal has been taken and a motion in the court below to dismiss because not entered forthwith in the appellate court has been denied, in an argument of the case on its merits in the appellate court a second such motion will be denied.²⁸

Questions reserved for advice of higher court. Under permissive statute the intermediate court can reserve a workmen's compensation case for the advice of the higher court without any appeal or judgment when the facts are not in dispute.²⁹

Rehearing. An employer in whose favor the decision was made by the compensation board or commission is not barred from appealing from a judgment of reversal by the court to which such decision was appealed because of his failure to have applied for a rehearing before the compensation board or commission, since the party who lost before the board or commission was the only one who had occasion to apply for a rehearing and to appeal.³⁰

Stay of execution. It has been held to be optional with the party appealing to the higher court whether or not there shall be a supersedeas.³¹ In order that the appeal may operate as a supersedeas he must comply with the terms and conditions prescribed therefor by statute and rule,³² which, under some statutes, are the same as are required in cases other than compensation cases.³³

In order that an appeal may operate as a supersedeas it must, under some acts and practice, be accompanied by a prescribed bond and must have been taken and perfected within a prescribed time.³⁴ Under others, the filing of an appeal bond and the entry of an appeal to the higher court from a judgment of the first reviewing court affirming the compensation award supersedes the execution of the award.³⁵ Where the statutes applicable to appeals in civil actions generally require a supersedeas bond in order to stay execution pending the outcome of the appeal, it is proper to require such bond in an appeal in compensation cases in the absence of anything to the contrary in the compensation act.³⁶

ceeding to enjoin and set aside a compensation award should be restored during the pendency of an appeal from a decree dismissing the proceeding.³⁷ A supersedeas on an appeal from a judgment denying an injunction against the enforcement of an award does not operate as a pendente lite injunction within an act prohibiting a stay of amounts payable under an award pending final decision or under a rule with respect to appeals from a judgment refusing an injunction.³⁸

Where the party appealing fails to obtain a stay or supersedeas, the other party may go on with the case or not, at his pleasure, the subsequent proceedings being taken at his peril.³⁹

b. Time for Taking and Perfecting

cree in a proceeding to set aside or enjoin a compensation order or award⁴¹ must be taken within the time after rendition of the judgment or decree specified by the compensation act or rule of practice in the particular jurisdiction. Also, writs of certiorari must be timely,⁴² and writs of error must be sued out within the time fixed for the return of the record to the commission.⁴³ Further, notice of appeal must be served and filed within the prescribed time.⁴⁴

The time allowed for taking and perfecting an appeal or other form of review ordinarily runs from the time of rendition of final order, judgment, or decree in the first reviewing court,⁴⁵ and not from the date on which the journal entry of judgment was filed.⁴⁶ Where, however, a motion for new trial is filed, the time allowed for taking and perfecting an appeal or other form of review generally commences to run on the overruling of the motion, rather than from the date of rendition of the judgment or decree,⁴⁷ although the contrary has also been held.⁴⁸

Under some acts and practice, the higher court is without jurisdiction to review the order or judgment of the lower court where the appeal is not taken and perfected within the prescribed time;⁴⁹ but under other acts an appeal will not be quashed because not taken within the prescribed time where notice of judgment was not given to the attorney for appellant,⁵⁰ or a party who, by accident or mistake, has failed to appeal within the time prescribed therefor may petition the full court for leave to appeal, which may be granted on terms.⁵¹

Ordinarily, appeals must be taken at the judgment term of court,⁵² but where a motion for new trial and in arrest of judgment and a bill of exceptions are required before one can perfect an appeal, the appeal may be taken at a subsequent term.⁵³ Where a bill of exceptions is not required, the filing of it in the term following that in which a motion for new trial was denied is not too late.⁵⁴

A statute providing that a compensation order as affirmed, modified, or reversed by the first reviewing court shall be filed in the office of the compensation commission and shall become final unless reversed or modified by the higher court on an appeal taken within a specified time after the entry of judgment of the first reviewing court does not require the order as affirmed, modified, or reversed to be filed in the office of the commission before an appeal may be taken from the order or judgment of the first reviewing court to a higher court.⁵⁵

§ 800. Assignment of Error

On a further review of the judgment or decree of a court reviewing an award or decision of a compensation board or commission, an assignment or specification of errors or a statement of the reasons or grounds for review is essential to a review of the claimed error where required by statute or rule of court; which assignment or specification of errors or reason for review must be clear and definite and distinctly point out the claimed error.

In accordance with the rule applicable in civil actions generally, as discussed in Appeal and Error §§ 1218-1242, an assignment or specification of errors or a statement of the reasons or grounds for appeal is essential, where required by statute or rule, to appellate review of the judgment or decree of a court reviewing an award or decision of a compensation board or commission.⁵⁶ Under such practice, errors not so raised and presented need not be considered by the higher court,⁵⁷ even though they were raised in the lower court,⁵⁸ or even though the questions were argued in the higher court.⁵⁹ Where the reason for appeal is that the decree is against the law, points which are necessarily based on facts and evidence cannot be considered,⁶⁰ and findings of the lower court not attacked by proper assignment of error are binding on the reviewing court⁶¹ and on appellant.⁶²

Fundamental errors, however, may be considered by the higher court, even though not assigned.⁶³

Omission of reading of pleadings

If just grounds existed for not reading to jury a particular part of employee's pleadings, and trial court "for good cause to be stated in record" should have directed omission of such reading and accompanying statement, such action should have been timely requested by insurance carrier and refusal to grant request, if any, presented for review as involving an abuse of discretion.

Matters reviewable

Supreme court will review only such exceptive assignments of error as are properly made to judgment of superior court alone, and its review is limited to consideration of assignments as to matters of law in trial in superior court.

63. Constitutionality of compensation law

Portion of appellees' brief containing appellees' argument in support of constitutionality of workmen's compensation law, which trial court had held unconstitutional, would not be stricken by supreme court on motion of appellants because appellees had filed no cross appeal or cross assignments of errors.

Miss.—Walters v. Blackledge, 71 (S. 2d 433, 224 Miss. 435.

Also, an assignment of error is not necessary where the appellant claims that, at the time of the injury, the employee was without any statutory right to recover compensation, as such question, going to the foundation of the right of action, arises on the face of the record without formal presentation by assignment of error.⁶⁴

Conformable to the rule applicable in civil actions generally, as discussed in Appeal and Error § 1253, assignments or specifications of error or reasons of appeal must, to be of any avail, be clear and definite and point out wherein the lower court erred.⁶⁵ Where, however, a compensation claimant himself prosecutes his appeal, and his reasons of appeal and assignment of errors are very informal, the higher court will consider his claims as far as they are presented on the record.⁶⁶ Where compensation cases follow the course of equity, ordinary questions

as to the decision as it appears in the decree may be presented under general reasons of appeal, but any grievance resulting from an erroneous ruling on some particular matter during the course of the trial, whether evidentiary or otherwise, should be made the subject of a separate and specific reason of appeal.⁶⁷

Where the court on appeal from a decision of the board adopted the findings of the referee in sustaining claimant's exceptions, a proper form of assignment of error on appeal is to assign the action of the court in sustaining the exceptions.⁶⁸ A specification that the evidence adduced showed as a matter of law that the person for whose injury compensation is claimed was an independent contractor requires the higher court to determine if the lower court correctly applied the law to the facts of the case.⁶⁹

Exceptions to judgment

(1) Exceptions to signing and rendition of judgment of lower court raise only question as to whether error in matters of law appear on face of record.

N.C.—Willingham v. Bryan Rock & Sand Co., 82 S.E.2d 68, 240 N.C. 281.

(2) Where only assignment of error presented on appeal is based on exception to signing of judgment by superior court approving compensation award by industrial commission, only question raised is as to whether facts found by industrial commission support award.

N.C.—Berry v. Colonial Furniture Co., 60 S.E.2d 97, 232 N.C. 303—Rader v. Queen City Coach Co., 35 S.E.2d 609, 225 N.C. 537.

Findings of fact

(1) When it is claimed that findings of fact made by industrial commission and approved by superior court are not supported by evidence, exceptions and assignments of error in relation thereto must specifically and distinctly point out alleged error.

N.C.—Willingham v. Bryan Rock & Sand Co., 82 S.E.2d 68, 240 N.C. 281—Worsley v. S. & W. Rendering Co., 80 S.E.2d 467, 239 N.C. 547.

(3) Where appeal entries and assignments of error by defendants appealing from judgment of superior court affirming award of full commission did not bring up for review findings of fact of full commission, or evidence on which they were based, judgment would be affirmed, if it was supported by findings of fact.

Mo.—Coleman v. Hercules Powder Co., App., 284 S.W.2d 32.

(5) Where appellant's exceptions to charge of lower court cover many pages of transcript, appellant's assignment of error assailing a definition given by lower court which did not show by reference to transcript what objections were urged by appellant to definition will be overruled, since court will not read transcript to ascertain what objections were.

An assignment of error objecting to the jurisdiction of the court on the ground that the appeal from the decision of the compensation board should have been taken to a court in another county is without merit where the court is a court of general jurisdiction and the action was commenced therein by the filing of the appeal.⁷⁰

The successful party in the first reviewing court may assign error in a cross bill of exceptions on his exceptions pendente lite.⁷¹ The higher court, however, cannot reform the judgment so as to give an appellee employee additional workmen's compensation where his claim therefor is not brought to the higher court by cross assignment.⁷² The appeal by appellant has been held not to give the higher court jurisdiction to consider cross assignments by one appellee as against a coappellee.⁷³

In brief. Under some acts and practice, no assignments of error, assignments of cross error, formal joinder in error, specification of points, or cross specification of points is required to be filed, but in lieu thereof each party is required to state clearly and briefly in his brief the grounds on which he relies in seeking a reversal or modification of the judgment or the correction of adverse findings, orders, or rulings of the lower court.⁷⁴ Under other acts and practice, errors of law which allegedly occurred during the trial in the court below must, subsequent to their assignment in a motion for new trial, also be assigned and discussed in the brief filed in the higher court, or they will not ordinarily be considered.⁷⁵

In motion for new trial. Under some acts and practice, the motion for a new trial constitutes the assignments of error on appeal and the assignments of error therein must clearly state the points of objection.⁷⁶

§ 801. Record

A record prepared in accordance with the statutes and rules is a prerequisite to consideration of an appeal or other form of review of the judgment or decree of a court reviewing an award or decision of a compensation board or commission; and the record must show such matters as are necessary for a consideration of the questions presented for review and limits the matters which may be considered.

In general, in accordance with the rule applicable in civil actions generally, as discussed in Appeal and Error § 680, a record prepared in accordance with the statutes and rules is a prerequisite to a consideration of an appeal or other form of review of the judgment or decree of a court reviewing an award or decision of a compensation board or commission; and the record must show such matters as are necessary for a consideration of the questions presented for review.⁷⁷ The record must

The higher court is limited to a consideration of such questions as are properly presented by the record or requisite part thereof, and matters not contained in the record or as to which the record is insufficient to enable the higher court to determine whether or not there was error will not be reviewed.⁸⁸ Matters objected to must be established by the record in order for the higher court to consider them,⁸⁹ and they must be considered in the light of the record as a whole.⁹⁰ The higher court will not review instructions which are not in the record,⁹¹ and in the absence of a statement of facts or some positive finding or certificate showing that the record contains all the material evidence, instructions involving factual issues which necessarily depend on the evidence may not be reviewed.⁹²

The question whether a finding or conclusion is correct cannot be determined where the record does

unless evidence was heard in the reviewing court,⁹⁹ or unless issues were raised and considered by the court which were not before the compensation board.¹ Where the only facts that may be considered are in the departmental record and that is before the higher court as part of the transcript on appeal, a statement of facts is not necessary to enable the higher court to consider questions of fact.²

Where a bill of exceptions is necessary, it must be prepared, served, settled, and filed in accordance with the requirements of the statutes and rules of practice.³ Under some acts and practice, a statement of facts must be agreed to by both parties or approved by the trial judge in order to be considered on appeal.⁴ A bill of exceptions or statement of facts is but a part of the record and it is unnecessary to incorporate therein that which is itself already a part of the record, such as the departmental record, where it has been filed in the lower court and is included in the transcript on appeal.⁵

A bill of exceptions, case, statement of facts, or other prescribed mode by which to bring matter into the record, containing all matters material to the question raised for review and necessary to enable the higher court to pass thereon, is required in order to obtain a review of matters which do not sufficiently appear from the record proper,⁶ such as

Jurisdiction of lower court to entertain appeal from compensation commission was held question proper for higher court to decide, even though bill of exceptions was not signed by judge of lower court.
Ohio.—Patterson v. Industrial Commission of Ohio, 34 N.E.2d 243, 67 Ohio App. 289.

Contents

A bill of exceptions should include only proceedings and evidence offered and received at trial de novo of a compensation case, and not an omnibus transcript thereof containing additional and nonpertinent proceedings had and evidence received in proceedings before industrial commission.

Ohio.—Rockey v. Armour Fertilizer Works, 28 N.E.2d 1009, 64 Ohio App. 497.

Failure to authenticate

(1) Higher court will refuse to consider a bill of exceptions filed in lower court on appeal from compensation award, and which was never offered or received in evidence at hearing in lower court and was filed in higher court, on appeal from judgment of lower court affirming award, without being certified, allowed, or authenticated as required by statute.
Neb.—Gillmore v. State, 28 N.W.2d 296, 148 Neb. 10.

(2) A bill of exceptions would be quashed where not settled by district court or approved by defendants.
Neb.—Adkisson v. Gamble, 9 N.W.2d 711, 143 Neb. 417.

Exceptions held not presented on appeal

Where record failed to show that judge of superior court ruled on any of specific exceptions to findings of fact and conclusions of law of industrial commission or that employer excepted to failure of judge to make such rulings, such exceptions were not presented on appeal.

Tex.—Highway Ins. Underwriters v. Le Beau, supra.

Amendment to pleadings

Where it appeared from marginal notation on alleged trial amendment to pleadings attached to motion to supplement record that amendment was filed fourteen days after entry of final judgment, court could not consider amendment for any purpose even though accompanying motion was a statement signed by court reporter that attorney dictated trial amendment to reporter during trial.

6. Portion of record available

A statement of facts is required to determine how much of record of compensation was read in first reviewing court, stricken, or held inadmissible, and hence what portion of it was still available to claimant.

alleged error in the exclusion of testimony,⁷ the instruction of a verdict,⁸ or the refusal of requested instructions.⁹ They are also required in order to obtain a review of questions pertaining to requests for interrogatories, exceptions to instructions, or the effect to be given to exhibits,¹⁰ or to the grant of a new trial on the ground that substantial justice had not been done.¹¹

The absence of a statement of facts, bill of exceptions, or other form of record containing the evidence does not require a dismissal of the appeal, since the higher court may always consider the question of whether the findings or verdict support the judgment, and whether the judgment is proper under the law.¹² The question presented where there is no report before the higher court of the testimony and findings is whether it was possible on any evidence which could have been introduced for the court below to have reached the determination which it did.¹³ Where a bill of exceptions is necessary, in its absence the court on appeal can consider only such errors as are fundamental.¹⁴ Where the question of jurisdiction has been raised on the appeal, it has been held not necessary to file a bill of exceptions in order to confer jurisdiction on the higher court.¹⁵ A bill of exceptions has been held to control a conflict between its provisions and those of a statement of facts.¹⁶

Time of making and filing. The record on further appeal should be made up and filed within the prescribed time.¹⁷ This rule applies to a transcript of the record,¹⁸ but where the filing of the transcript within the prescribed time is not a jurisdictional act, the failure to do so will not defeat the appeal.¹⁹ A statement of facts filed after the time prescribed by statute will, on motion, be stricken.²⁰ Where a bill of exceptions is necessary, it must be presented and settled or authenticated within the prescribed time.²¹

Alteration of record. Where the record shows an alteration, showing election to come within the act, in the absence of any claim before the commission and the lower court that the alteration was made after certification and approval, the employ-

Correction to show judgment entry

Where supreme court had no jurisdiction of appeal because no judgment had been entered by district court after district court made a finding in favor of claimant supreme court would give parties twenty days in which to have proper judgment entered nunc pro tunc and to have record corrected to show such judgment.

Iowa.—Crowe v. De Soto Consol. School Dist., 66 N.W.2d 859, 246 Iowa 38.

Remand for correction.

(1) Where claimant died while appeal from determination of compensation bureau was pending in common pleas court, claimant's widow was substituted in his stead, and judgment was rendered in favor of widow, but record did not disclose cause of death, record on further appeal would be remanded for correction and amplification as to persons entitled to award and their respective interests and also as to amount and extent of award.
N.J.—Williams v. New Jersey State Highway Dept., 34 A.2d 889, 131 N.J.Law 108.

(2) A purely formal, nonjurisdictional omission of a formal order of dismissal in record in compensation proceeding, replaced by letter of referee, which was treated as a formal order by parties, and could be corrected by nunc pro tunc order of amendment, was such an omission as reviewing court in interest of justice could disregard without remanding record, or holding case pending application for corrective action in trial court.

N.J.—Ruoff v. Blasi, 131 A. 877, 118 N.J.Law 314.

(3) On appeal from judgment of county court to which workmen's compensation award was appealed, higher court would not remand cause to compensation division for a more complete record where request to enlarge record had not been diligently pursued in county court.

Effect of dismissal

Where application for writ of error to review decision in workmen's compensation suit contained no assignment attacking rulings of lower court on question concerning whether claimants proved good cause for not filing their claim with compensation board within time required by law, supreme court which dismissed application, did so without approving holding of lower court on such question.

where the error involved is merely clerical and correctable by the court below, and the amount involved is too small to give the appellate court jurisdiction,²⁹ where no judgment entry was made in the lower court,³⁰ where at the time of entry of appeal and the return day thereof in the higher court the judgment appealed from had not been filed with the clerk of the lower court,³¹ where the bill of exceptions was not served on a necessary party on the appeal,³² where the appeal or writ of error was not taken and perfected within the prescribed time,³³ where the return day of the appeal was after the prescribed time,³⁴ or where the notice of appeal was not served or filed within the required time³⁵ or in accordance with other prescribed requirements.³⁶

An appeal from a decision affirming an award disallowing compensation may be dismissed where there was no finding as to the cause of the injury.³⁷ Where, after a case had been remitted and the commission had made a final award subsequent to the death of claimant, which was affirmed on appeal, on findings, disclosing claimant's death, a further appeal will be dismissed, no substitution having been made as required.³⁸

An appeal from a judgment affirming an award will not be dismissed for a mere misnomer,³⁹ or because of the failure to serve the appellee with a citation to answer the appeal, where such negligence was due to the negligence of the clerk of court.⁴⁰ Also, an appeal or writ of error will not be dismissed for a defect in the supersedeas bond, since any defect of substance or form may be cured by amendment.⁴¹

While the commencement of a new action based on the same matter involved in a decision appealed from may generally require dismissal of the appeal, this rule has been held not to be applied to the filing of a new claim for compensation to avoid the bar of limitations in the event of an adverse decision on appeal from a judgment reversing an allowance of compensation.⁴²

Prior reversal

Where court of civil appeals on former appeal reversed judgment for claimants in compensation proceedings on ground that evidence was insufficient to support verdict, but holding of court of civil appeals was reversed by supreme court which held that since evidence was conflicting court of civil appeals was without authority to substitute its findings for that of jury, and on subsequent appeal from judgment for claimants, evidence was substantially same as on former appeal, court of civil appeals was not required by law of case to reverse judgment on ground of insufficiency of evidence, since it was duty of court of civil appeals to follow supreme court.

Matters not necessary to decision on review will not ordinarily be passed on by the reviewing court,⁶¹ but it may do so.⁶² On proceedings to review a judgment for attorney's fees in favor of an employee, the question of the amount of the award of compensation is not reviewable.⁶³ Where the lower court erroneously dismissed an appeal from the commission, but granted certiorari on the ground that there was no remedy by appeal, and determined every question which could have been raised by appeal, the higher court, after determining that appeal is proper, need not determine whether the certiorari was properly issued.⁶⁴

Where the ruling of the lower court on an issue is proper on one ground, it is not necessary to consider its propriety on other grounds.⁶⁵ Where the grounds on which the lower court acted do not appear, its action will be upheld if it can be sustained on any theory,⁶⁶ and where the judgment below is correct, it is immaterial that incorrect reasons were assigned for the action taken.⁶⁷

Moot or academic questions will not be decided.⁶⁸

A question as to payment of compensation pending appeal is moot where no payments were made and, in the meantime, an act was passed suspending such payments.⁶⁹

Waiver of grounds. Where insurer appealed from the decree and also from the denial of its motion to recommit to the board, the appeal from such denial must be treated as waived when not referred to in the brief or argued at the bar.⁷⁰ A party cannot complain on review of an erroneous ruling⁷¹ or instruction⁷² which he invited or requested, or in which he acquiesced.⁷³ One who introduces a certificate of the record of the board cannot object to its sufficiency.⁷⁴ One seeking compensation under a special provision for awards for hernia could not assign as error refusal to make award under general provisions of the act.⁷⁵ Where both parties to a compensation case alleged that the injury was sustained in a certain county, on appeal of insurer a reversal cannot be had for want of evidence that the injury was sustained in such county.⁷⁶ The parties are usually restricted on appeal to the theory on which the case was tried in the lower court.⁷⁷

and a party may be estopped to take a position in the appellate court contrary to the position he took in the lower court.⁷⁸

Agreements limiting review. An agreement between counsel that the only issue involved in the appeal was the constitutionality of the statute does not preclude the court from considering the question of whether the work in which the employee was engaged was within the act, where the record before the court was sufficient for determination of such question.⁷⁹ An agreement that the case should be determined in accordance with the disposition of another claimant's appeal waives questions not involved in such other appeal.⁸⁰

Questions of jurisdiction are not removed from the case by waiver or estoppel;⁸¹ but the jurisdiction of the court below to render judgment against insurer on reversing an order of the board cannot be questioned by an insurer who, while not formally on the record as a party, conducted the entire controversy including the appeals from the board and the court below, the employer never denying liability or resisting an award.⁸²

§ 804. — Parties Entitled to Allege Error

One who did not join in the appeal cannot allege error.

One who did not join in the appeal cannot allege error.⁸³ Thus a respondent who does not file a cross appeal may not allege error.⁸⁴ Where the employer appeals from an award but claimant takes no cross appeal, his objection to modification of the award by the appellate court cannot be considered on the employer's appeal from that court,⁸⁵ and an appeal by an insurer gives the employer no right to be heard on review where he took no appeal from the award of the board;⁸⁶ but it has been held that an employer's failure to appeal from a favorable judgment affirming denial of compensation, although both the court and the commission overruled his contention that deceased employee was engaged in interstate commerce, did not prevent the employer's raising the question on claimant's appeal.⁸⁷ On claimant's appeal from the action of the lower court on the employer's appeal from the award of the compensation commission, claimant could not obtain review of a ruling of the commission from which he did not appeal.⁸⁸

On further judicial review of compensation proceedings, the appellate court will indulge all reasonable presumptions in support of the action of the lower court.

In accordance with general rules, the appellate court, on further judicial review of compensation proceedings, will indulge all reasonable presumptions in support of the action of the lower court.⁸⁹

Reasonable misapprehension as to law

In suit arising under Texas Workmen's Compensation Law, insurer which took position that determinative question in case was whether employee had in fact been employed in Texas to do work in Louisiana, was not prevented from asserting on appeal that material question was whether employee's work in Louisiana was done under and pursuant to an employer-employee status of work and service existing in Texas, particularly in view of authoritative decision by supreme court of Texas handed down shortly after trial of case in lower court.

discretionary power with respect to its disbursement.⁶³

Fund for reopened cases. In New York a special fund has been set up for the payment of stale claims.⁶⁴ Liability against the fund for reopened cases arises only under the precise conditions set 580—Special Indem. Fund v. Smith, 242 P.2d 159, 206 Okl. 185.

Loss of hearing

(1) The word "member," as used in special indemnity fund act relating to a physically impaired person, does not include the ear.

Okl.—Special Indem. Fund of State v. Stone, 207 P.2d 263, 201 Okl. 465.

(2) Workman, who had lost the hearing in one ear in a previous accident, was not a physically impaired person, within meaning of special indemnity fund act, so as to be entitled to compensation from the fund on the loss of hearing of other ear as the result of another accident arising out of, and in the course of, his employment.

Okl.—Special Indem. Fund of State v. Stone, supra.

Loss of fingers

Employee who had lost two fingers was a "physically impaired person" within the special indemnity fund act, and, when thumb of the same hand was amputated because of subsequent injury resulting in additional permanent disability so that degree of disability caused by combination of both disabilities was materially greater than that which would have resulted from subsequent injury, remainder of disability after termination of employer's payment of per cent of disability which would have resulted from the subsequent injury alone was payable out of the special indemnity fund.

Okl.—Special Indem. Fund v. Dimpel, 207 P.2d 776, 201 Okl. 526.

Limp or back injury

(1) A pre-existing injury to a hip or back does not bring claimant within the statute.

Okl.—Special Indem. Fund of Okl. v. Wade, 189 P.2d 609, 199 Okl. 547.

(2) A hip injury that results directly in partial permanent disability to a leg is an injury to the leg and may be combined with a subsequent injury under the special indemnity fund act.

Okl.—Special Indem. Fund of Okl. v. Wade, supra.

Loss of use of finger

An employed person who has formerly lost the use of an index finger by reason of same becoming stiffened is a physically impaired person whose impairment is obvious and apparent from examination by an ordinary layman within workmen's compensation act relating to an award against the special indemnity fund.

Power to compromise claims

Control over the allowance of disability benefits from the publicly administered special compensation funds is wholly vested in the industrial commission, and no other official or department, in behalf of the state or in behalf of anyone else, has such ownership in or supervision over the fund as to empower them to compromise disability benefits or to make recommendations which are a material factor in the exercise of the industrial commission's discretion.

Minn.—Senske v. Fairmont & Waseca Canning Co., supra.

Claim against state

The special compensation fund is a fund which belongs to industry and is a public fund only in the sense that the public welfare is highly involved with its proper administration, and the injured workman's right to total disability benefits from the fund is not based upon any direct financial obligation of the state.

Minn.—Senske v. Fairmont & Waseca Canning Co., supra.

Attorney general

(1) An employee's claim for total disability benefits from the special compensation fund is not in the nature of a claim against the state which may be compromised and settled by the attorney general, and the attorney general's recommendation of such a compromise is not a material factor in ascertaining whether the industrial commission has abused its discretion in declining to approve such settlement.

Minn.—Senske v. Fairmont & Waseca Canning Co., supra.

(2) The attorney general may properly appear in workmen's compensation cases in behalf of the custodian of the special compensation fund in so far as that official's purely ministerial function is concerned.

Minn.—Senske v. Fairmont & Waseca Canning Co., supra.

(3) In the performance of his official duties, the opinions and recommendations given by attorney general to industrial commission are entitled to the greatest respect, but such opinions and recommendations cannot control or become a material factor in the exercise of the commission's discretion as to allowance or denial of disability benefits from the special compensation fund.

Minn.—Senske v. Fairmont & Waseca Canning Co., supra.

63. Minn.—Senske v. Fairmont & Waseca Canning Co., supra.

Duty to resist illegal disbursements

While the state treasurer's ministerial role gives him no discretionary control over payment of disability benefits from special compensation fund, the treasurer does have, by virtue of the inherent nature of his custodianship of the funds, a right and a duty, for the preservation of the fund, to resist disbursements and invasions which have no basis in law.

and the burden is on the appellant to show error.⁹⁰ Thus it has been presumed in support of the judgment appealed from that the proceedings were regular and legal,⁹¹ that the appeal to the lower court was timely,⁹² that claims of error not specifically ruled on were considered and overruled,⁹³ that a witness was competent,⁹⁴ that admissible evidence was not rejected,⁹⁵ that inadmissible evidence was not considered,⁹⁶ that there was evidence warranting the ruling made,⁹⁷ that facts supporting the judgment were found,⁹⁸ that conflicts in the evidence were resolved in support of the judgment,⁹⁹ and that the findings were correct¹ and were supported by the evidence.²

Where the record is silent as to the grounds for a ruling, the reviewing court may assume that the grounds were sufficient,³ but where a finding is not made the court cannot make assumptions as to what the evidence would show on the matter.⁴ A fact will not be presumed in the face of evidence to the contrary.⁵

It will be presumed that the claim is within the compensation law.⁶ Where the lower court reversed a decision of the board awarding compensation, claimant must produce the evidence to show that the board was justified in making the award, since there is no presumption that there was evidence sufficient to sustain the board.⁷ Where the compensation claim was dismissed for lack of jurisdiction, no implication of a decision on the merits may be drawn.⁸

While it may be presumed that the harm resulting from an improper argument was cured by the court's instruction,⁹ improper argument clearly calculated to prejudice the jury will be presumed to have had that effect.¹⁰

Where the lower court is one of limited statutory jurisdiction, its jurisdiction will not be presumed but must appear affirmatively from the record.¹¹ Where the validity of the award is directly attacked, no presumption in favor of jurisdiction or due process can be indulged,¹² but, in the absence of objection, jurisdiction of the court below will be presumed.¹³

§ 806. — Discretion of Lower Court

The exercise of discretion by the lower court on review of compensation proceedings will not be reviewed or disturbed on further judicial review except for abuse of discretion.

In accordance with general rules, the exercise of discretion by the lower court on review of compensation proceedings will not be reviewed or disturbed on further judicial review¹⁴ except where such discretion has been abused.¹⁵ Thus the court on appeal will not review the lower court's action with respect to requiring medical examinations of claimants on appeal,¹⁶ or its determination of the number of weeks over which payments shall extend,¹⁷ or its allowance of a petition for suspension of a decree ordering payments of compensation,¹⁸ or its determination that the cause constitutes a special case within the act providing for lump-sum awards in such cases,¹⁹ its refusal of a rehearing,²⁰ the denial of a motion to vacate the judgment entered on the award,²¹ or allowance of costs against plaintiff in an action to set aside an award.²²

This rule has also been applied with respect to the lower court's rulings on postponements and continuances of the case,²³ the court's refusal to permit further evidence in chief after that phase of the case has been closed,²⁴ and its action in recommending,²⁵ or refusing to recommit,²⁶ the cause to

Second operation

In view of fact that compensation statutes make no provision for a second operation of an employee who has suffered a disabling injury, question whether employee who had submitted to first unsuccessful operation for correction of hernia should be required to submit to a second operation was within sound discretion of trial judge, and when his determination was supported by evidence it would not be disturbed by appellate court.

the compensation commission. While ordinarily the recommitment of a case to the board for further hearing is within the discretion of the judge of the lower court, where it appears that the action was taken solely to direct a reconsideration of correct rulings of law or findings of fact based on the due consideration of all questions of law or evidence the action of the judge may be reviewed.²⁷ While the amount of allowance to a partial dependent is to be determined in the exercise of sound discretion, an allowance of the maximum to one dependent in a very small degree may be reviewed.²⁸

§ 807. — Questions of Law or Fact, Findings, and Verdict

- a. In general
- b. Applications of rules

a. In General

On further review, the appellate court is normally restricted to questions of law, and the extent to which it may review questions of fact is governed by the statutes, the scope of review in the court below, and whether evidence was received in the court below.

As discussed supra § 669 et seq, much diversity exists as to the procedure for the review of compensation awards and as to the scope of review in such proceedings, and such variations must be considered in determining the scope and extent of review of questions of law and fact, findings, and verdicts on further review.²⁹ The scope of further review may, of course, be limited or expanded by statute.³⁰

Where, as is the usual practice, evidence is received only at the hearing conducted by the compensation authorities, and not in the court which directly reviews the award, the appellate court before which the matter may be brought for further review is normally restricted to questions of law³¹ and may not review or disturb the fact findings of the compensation authorities³² where such findings based on conflicting evidence,³⁷ or are not unreasonable³⁸ or clearly and manifestly against the weight of the evidence.³⁹

This rule is obviously applicable on appeal from an affirmance of the determination by the compensation authorities.⁴⁰ It also applies where the lower court has set aside the findings of the compensation authorities,⁴¹ and the findings of the compensation authorities, if supported by sufficient evidence, must be reinstated on further review.⁴²

The statute usually provides that the compensation board or commission is to determine the facts, and its determination will be followed although the actual hearing was conducted by an examiner, hearing officer, or referee,⁴³ whose findings were con-

Heavy burden on appellant

A party attacking a finding by the commissioner upon conflicting evidence which was sustained by the superior court has a heavy burden to overcome the presumption that the concurrent finding by two competent tribunals is correct.

Conn.—Driscoll v. Jewell Belting Co., 114 A. 109, 96 Conn. 295.

Where there is any evidence of probative value to support workmen's compensation board's finding, judgment affirming board's award thereon must be affirmed by court of appeals.

Verdict approved by trial court

Award in compensation case approved by superior court, with respect to sufficiency of evidence, occupies status of verdict approved by trial judge.

The court is not the fact-finding body in compensation proceedings and could not add a finding of fact to referee's decision, and the court

trary to those made by the commission.⁴⁴ It is frequently stated that the findings of the compensation authorities are to be given the same force and effect as the verdict of a jury.⁴⁵ It is not for the court on further review to try the case de novo,⁴⁶ to weigh the evidence,⁴⁷ to pass on the credibility of witnesses,⁴⁸ or to substitute its judgment for that of the compensation authorities.⁴⁹

The sufficiency of the evidence to support the findings of the compensation authorities is a question of law,⁵⁰ and the court on further review may consider whether the findings are supported by suf-could not impose a finding of fact on the compensation board, but could only review the board's action if it made a finding which was not supported by evidence.

ficient evidence⁵¹ even though the determination of the compensation authorities was affirmed on appeal to the lower court.⁵² On subsequent review, the court is not bound by the determination of the lower court as to the sufficiency of the evidence to support the findings of the compensation agency, but will make its own independent determination of that matter.⁵³ The court on further review is not bound by findings not supported by the evidence⁵⁴ or based on stipulated⁵⁵ or undisputed⁵⁶ facts. It has been held that where the fact findings of the compensation authorities are against the party having the burden of proof, the court will consider, not whether the findings are supported by competent evidence, but whether competent evidence was capriciously disregarded.⁵⁷

Fact conclusively established

In compensation proceeding for injury to back, even if the board had not in effect found an abnormal pre-existing condition, superior court would be obliged to act as though the board had found an abnormal pre-existing condition in claimant's back where the evidence of the abnormal pre-existing condition was so conclusive that any other finding would amount to error of law.

Depositions

Where depositions of witnesses testifying before industrial accident board were presented to district judge on appeal from board's order denying compensation to injured employee and brought before supreme court on appeal from judgment reversing such order, supreme court must examine such evidence and determine value thereof.

Lump-sum award

On appeal, whether, on undisputed facts, an order for a lump-sum computation of compensation award is authorized by workmen's compensation act is a question of law.

In determining the sufficiency of the evidence to support the finding of the compensation authorities the court considers the evidence in the light most favorable to the finding,⁵⁸ and considers only the evidence favorable to the finding,⁵⁹ but the court considers all of the evidence in determining whether the finding is contrary to the overwhelming weight of the evidence.⁶⁰

On further review, the court may consider questions of law,⁶¹ such as whether or not the law has been properly applied to the facts⁶² or whether the findings justify the award,⁶³ and in the adjudication of questions of law the determinations of the compensation authorities and the lower court are not binding.⁶⁴

Jurisdiction. It has been held that the findings of the compensation authorities as to jurisdictional facts are not conclusive and that it is the duty of the court on further review to determine the jurisdictional facts on all of the evidence without regard to the findings by the compensation commission.⁶⁵

Trial de novo in lower court. As discussed supra § 765 et seq, in some jurisdictions, on judicial review of the award in a compensation case, the matter is tried de novo, with provision made for the reception of evidence and a jury trial. While the reviewing court may determine questions of law,⁶⁶ on further appeal the verdict or findings of fact in the lower court will not be reviewed or disturbed⁶⁷ where supported by substantial⁶⁸ evidence,⁶⁹ or not clearly against the manifest weight of the evidence,⁷⁰ or unless clearly wrong⁷¹ or when the evidence is conflicting⁷² or such that reasonable men might differ.⁷³

The reviewing court will not weigh the evidence,⁷⁴ but it may determine whether the evidence is sufficient to justify submission to the jury⁷⁵ and whether it is adequate to sustain the facts found by the jury.⁷⁶ The court on further review may also

Interstate commerce

Superior Court is not bound by deductions of referee or compensation board with respect to character of employment, whether interstate or intrastate, but must draw its own conclusions from evidence, since question is one of paramount federal law.

Place of injury

Circuit court of appeals is not bound by federal employees' compensation commissioner's findings as to place of injury resulting in death, since jurisdiction of commissioner is involved, but findings of commissioner, concurred in by district judge, will not be reversed unless clearly wrong.

Navigable river

In proceeding for compensation for death of employee who was drowned as result of accident which occurred on Assonet River, trial justice's finding that river was a navigable stream of the United States was not conclusive on claimant's appeal, but such finding would not be disturbed by supreme court, where it did not appear from claimant's brief and argument that she had raised question of nonnavigability on appeal.

"Scintilla"

Under provision of workmen's compensation act that jury's decision of fact question, made on appeal from industrial accident commission's order, is binding and conclusive on courts, the "scintilla" rule does not apply and jury's fact finding must be based on substantial evidence.

determine whether the conclusion below is against the overwhelming weight and preponderance of the evidence.⁷⁷ Its determination of this question is final and may not be reviewed on further appeal to the highest court.⁷⁸ The highest court may only consider the question of whether there is any evidence to support the verdict,⁷⁹ in the disposition of which the court may look only to the evidence supporting the verdict.⁸⁰

While it has been held that, in determining the sufficiency of the evidence to support the verdict or finding below, the court will view the evidence most favorably to the verdict or finding⁸¹ and will consider only the evidence in favor of the verdict or finding,⁸² it would appear that the latter rule is limited to the question of whether or not the evidence requires a contrary verdict or finding as a matter of law, as where the claimed error is in submitting the case to the jury or not directing a verdict,⁸³ and that where the contention is that the verdict

or finding is against the overwhelming weight and preponderance of the evidence the court is required to consider all of the evidence.⁸⁴ Where the verdict below was directed, the appellate court will consider the evidence in the light most favorable to the party against whom the verdict was directed.⁸⁵

Where the lower court's ruling on a motion for a new trial involves a question of fact, the lower court's determination of the question, where supported by the evidence, will be accepted.⁸⁶

In Florida, the determination of the facts by the lower court on the record made before the compensation authorities is to be accorded that degree of consideration which is given to the findings of a chancellor in an ordinary chancery suit.⁸⁷ Thus, the findings of the circuit court will ordinarily be sustained if supported by substantial evidence.⁸⁸ On review, the supreme court must determine whether the circuit court observed the substantial evidence rule and whether its order is correct under the law.⁸⁹

In Kansas, on appeal from the compensation commissioner, the district court makes an independent determination of the law and the facts on the record of the proceedings before the compensation authorities; questions of fact are to be determined by the district court, and on further appeal, the supreme court is limited to questions of law.⁹⁰ The findings of fact made by the district court are conclusive⁹¹ if there is any evidence from which a reasonable inference may be drawn to sustain such findings,⁹² or if they are supported by substantial competent evidence,⁹³ or if the evidence is conflicting,⁹⁴ even though the findings by the district court conflict with those made by the compensation authorities.⁹⁵ The supreme court is concerned only with the fact findings of the district court and not with those made by the compensation commissioner.⁹⁶

While the supreme court may not weigh the evidence,⁹⁷ the question of whether or not the findings of the lower court are supported by the evidence is one of law⁹⁸ which will be determined by the supreme court.⁹⁹ The court will set aside a finding without support in the evidence.¹ In determining whether the findings of the district court are supported by the evidence, the supreme court will view the evidence in the light most favorable to the findings of the district court,² and will consider only the evidence which supports the findings.³

In Maryland, as considered supra § 770, on appeal from the industrial commission, the court is required at the request of either party to submit the questions of fact to a jury, and the verdict of the jury is to be accorded the same effect on review as in other civil actions.⁴ Where the lower court enters a judgment notwithstanding the verdict, the question for review is whether or not it was proper for the court to submit the question to the jury.⁵ Where the appeal is from the refusal of the court to direct a verdict, the evidence in support of the verdict must be accepted as true.⁶ It appears that where the lower court decides the case without a jury on the record of the proceedings before the commission, on a further appeal to the court of appeals, the court must weigh the evidence.⁷ By stipulation of the parties, the scope of review may be limited to the legal sufficiency of the evidence to sustain the claim.⁸

In Montana, where the lower court affirms the findings of the compensation authorities, the function of the court on further appeal is limited to determining whether or not the findings are supported by substantial evidence.⁹ Where the lower court, on receiving additional evidence makes findings contrary to those made by the agency, it has been held that the reviewing court will itself determine where the preponderance of the evidence lies;¹⁰ but it has also been held that the findings of the lower court, supported by the evidence, will not be disturbed without regard to whether the evidence is sufficient to support the contrary findings of the board.¹¹ It has also been stated that where the lower court reviews on the record before the commission or where the additional evidence received by the lower court is unimportant, the lower court will be reversed and the findings of the board reinstated unless the evidence clearly preponderates against the findings of the board;¹² but where substantial additional evidence is introduced in the lower court, its findings will not be reversed unless the evidence clearly preponderates against them.¹³ Where the facts are undisputed, the supreme court is free to make its own findings.¹⁴ Where all the evidence is in written form, the supreme court is in as good a position to determine the merits as the lower court or the compensation board.¹⁵

In Nebraska, where appeal is taken to the supreme court from a judgment of the district court on an appeal from the compensation court, the supreme court is required to consider the case de novo on the record below where the findings of fact are not conclusively supported by the evidence.¹⁶ However, where the evidence is conflicting and cannot

Demurrer

On appeal by employer, whose demurrer prayer was denied in compensation proceeding, court of appeals was required to assume as true all natural and legitimate inferences from evidence in favor of claimant, and to resolve in favor of claimant all conflicts in evidence. *Md.—Great A. & P. Presumptions

Court of appeals assumed truth of all evidence tending to sustain claim and of all inferences fairly deducible from it, and did not weigh conflicting evidence to determine its comparative weight, but decided only whether there was any evidence legally sufficient to permit finding sought by claimant.

Equity action

A workmen's compensation case is a civil action, equitable in character, and so triable by supreme court on appeal.

be reconciled, the supreme court will consider the fact that the lower court observed the witnesses and gave credence to the testimony of some witnesses rather than the contradictory testimony of others;¹⁷ and findings of fact supported by sufficient evidence or based on substantially conflicting evidence will not be reversed unless clearly wrong.¹⁸

In New Jersey, on appeal from the county court in a compensation case, the superior court is empowered to review the facts and make independent findings thereon.¹⁹ However, this power is permissive and appellant is not entitled to its exercise as a matter of right,²⁰ and the power will not be exercised unless it is clear that the determination of the county court is wrong²¹ and that the ends of justice require the exercise of the power.²² The power is to be exercised sparingly²³ and not simply on the ground that the findings of the county court are in conflict with those made by the compensation authorities,²⁴ although such conflict is a factor inducing the exercise of the power.²⁵ The power of the superior court to make independent findings of fact may be exercised even where the findings made by the county court are in accord with those of the compensation authorities.²⁶ Where the county court reversed the compensation authorities on a matter not raised on the appeal, the superior court has exercised its power to make independent findings of fact.²⁷ Similarly, the superior court has exercised such power where the county court failed to make findings.²⁸

The findings of fact by the county court are entitled to great weight.²⁹ It is the findings of the county court, rather than those of the compensation authorities, that are to be given determinative weight,³⁰ and where the findings of the county court are supported by sufficient evidence, they normally will not be disturbed³¹ unless the court is well satisfied that the findings are mistaken.³²

Particular weight is given to the fact findings of the county court where they agree with those made by the compensation authorities.³³ The power to make independent findings of fact is not normally exercised where the county court affirmed the findings of the compensation authorities,³⁴ and where such findings are supported by sufficient evidence, they will not be disturbed,³⁵ particularly where the evidence presents a question of credibility;³⁶ but the court will reverse a finding not supported by sufficient evidence.³⁷

ment of the compensation tribunal and the county court is of persuasive but not determinative weight in the superior court.³⁸

On further appeal, the supreme court will not weigh the evidence;³⁹ and the judgment of the superior court is conclusive where a question of fact or the inference to be drawn from the facts is presented by the proofs.⁴⁰

Under the prior constitutional provisions governing the courts, on certiorari from a judgment of the court of common pleas reviewing a determination by the compensation authorities, the supreme court was required to make an independent determination of the law and the facts,⁴¹ even when the compen-

Much weight

Superior court should accord much weight to finding of fact of county court and should not disturb it unless well satisfied that finding is a mistaken one, even though county court did not hear witnesses, but determined case from a reading of same evidence as that before superior court.

Palpably erroneous

To warrant reversal of concordant factual determinations of workmen's compensation division and county court in a workmen's compensation case, it must appear that findings are palpably erroneous and so plainly unjustified by evidence that interests of justice necessitate their nullification. N.J.—Duncan v. T. I. McCormack Trucking Co., 128 A.2d 722, 43 N.J. Super. 352.

38. N.J.—Buerkle v. United Parcel Service, 93 A.2d 327, 26 N.J.Super. 404.

Where there was no factual dispute in workmen's compensation proceeding, appellate division of superior court was not bound by "two court rule" providing that where two independent and distinct tribunals, such as division of workmen's compensation and county court have reached same conclusion on an issue of fact, conclusion so reached should not lightly be disturbed by reviewing court.

N.J.—Condon v. Smith, 117 A.2d 272, 37 N.J.Super. 320, affirmed 120 A.2d 460, 20 N.J. 557.

Dismissal of claim as matter of law

On appeal from dismissal of action in county court for workmen's compensation on basis of determination that, as matter of law, claim was not actionable, every reasonable inference from proof had to be resolved in favor of prima facie compensability.

Palpable error

Where two lower courts considered facts in a proceeding for workmen's compensation and reached concurrent findings, supreme court would not make a new and independent finding unless error in concurrent findings was so palpable that a new finding by it was necessary to insure essential justice.

or if the evidence is in conflict,⁵⁰ but the court would examine the evidence to determine whether or not it raised a question of fact,⁵¹ and would reverse a judgment not sustained by competent evidence.⁵²

In North Dakota, on appeal to the supreme court from the judgment of the district court on review of a determination by the compensation authorities, the supreme court determines the case de novo.⁵³

In Ohio, under a provision authorizing a jury trial on the record before the compensation authorities as to jurisdictional matters, on a further appeal to the court of appeals, that court will not weigh the evidence,⁵⁴ and will construe the evidence most favorably to the judgment appealed from.⁵⁵ The verdict of the jury or of the court sitting as the trier of the facts is given the same effect as in other civil actions,⁵⁶ and the verdict or finding of the lower court will be reversed where it is contrary to the conclusion that reasonable men would reach.⁵⁷

In Rhode Island prior to the amendment of the statute to provide for an appeal from the compensation authorities directly to the supreme court, it was provided that the superior court could determine the case de novo on appeal from the compensation authorities, and that the findings of the superior court, if supported by legal evidence, were binding on the supreme court in the absence of fraud.⁵⁸ The supreme court could not consider the

Positive and negative findings

Under workmen's compensation act

there is no distinction made between positive and negative findings, and negative findings, in absence of fraud, are conclusive if supported by legal evidence.

R.I.—De Fusco v. Ochee Spring Water Co., 124 A.2d 867.

Written evidence

Supreme court being precluded by statute from adjudicating facts in workman's compensation case, fact that case was decided solely on official transcript of evidence and doctors' written reports by another superior court justice than one who presided at hearing because of his subsequent retirement did not alter rule that fact findings of superior court are conclusive, in absence of fraud, and such decision cannot be disturbed by supreme court on appeal, unless justice who decided case misconceived evidence.

R.I.—Egan v. Walsh-Kaiser Co., 56 A.2d 854, 73 R.I. 399.

Fraud

Where matter of fraud legitimately arises for first time in workmen's compensation case after case has been heard on merits in superior court, court in which case then is pending may be asked, after giving opposing party an opportunity to be heard, to provide some method for having fraud issue tried.

Undisputed evidence

General rule that court on appeal can draw inferences from undisputed evidence is inapplicable in workmen's compensation cases because of provision of compensation act that, in absence of fraud, findings of fact by superior court shall be conclusive.

court was not concerned with the evidence in conflict with the findings of the superior court.⁶⁴ The legal effect of certain evidence was a question of law subject to review.⁶⁵

In Washington, the scope of review on appeal to the supreme court from the judgment of the superior court depends on whether or not there was a jury trial in the superior court; where the lower court determined the case on the record before the compensation authorities without a jury, the appeal is heard by the supreme court *de novo*⁶⁶ and the statutory presumption that the findings of the compensation authorities are correct applies despite findings to the contrary by the superior court.⁶⁷

However the verdict of the jury has the same effect as in law actions⁶⁸ and will not be disturbed on appeal where it is supported by substantial evidence.⁶⁹ The supreme court cannot weigh the evidence⁷⁰ but may consider its adequacy to support the verdict of the jury.⁷¹ The statutory presumption that the findings of the compensation authorities are correct goes out of the case where the jury decides the questions of fact properly submitted to it,⁷² and the evidence must be viewed from the

Affirmance by lower court

A decision of department of labor and industries, supported by weight of evidence and confirmed by superior court in proceeding to recover compensation for employee's death, must be affirmed on appeal to supreme court, in view of statutory provision declaring it prima facie correct.

Hearing before examiner

In compensation proceeding, evident conclusions and deductions of joint board and trial court are entitled to some weight, although evidence was taken before an examiner.

Prior law

Prior to effective date of act providing that verdicts in workmen's compensation cases shall have same force and effect as in actions at law, verdict in jury case was merely advisory and it would have been error to treat it as mandatory and binding.

Judgment notwithstanding verdict

(1) On appeal from judgment entered non obstante veredicto in compensation case, reviewing court will search entire record only for purpose of finding evidence which tends to support verdict.

(2) Under statute providing that verdicts rendered in workmen's compensation cases shall have same force and effect as in actions at law, primary inquiry on assignment that trial court erred in granting judgment notwithstanding verdict is whether there was any evidence to support verdict.

Directed verdict

In passing on sufficiency of evidence to present a case to a superior court jury in a workman's compensation case, supreme court will review all evidence and all reasonable inferences therefrom in light most favorable to claimant.

b. Applications of Rules

The rules as to the scope of further judicial review have been applied on review of particular questions of law and fact.

The general rules, discussed supra subdivision a of this section, as to the scope and extent of review, on further appeal, of questions of law and fact, findings, and verdict have been applied in reviewing the various questions that arise in compensation cases, such as whether the employment was covered by the statute,⁷⁴ whether the injury was compensable, as due to an accident arising out of, and in the course of, employment,⁷⁵ whether such accident caused the verdict or findings.¹

A finding of willful misconduct of the employee, barring a compensation claim, makes immaterial any error in rulings on other issues.² Although the court could have corrected an error of law on the record, remanding the case to the board, with directions, is harmless where no prejudice results.³ A verdict of guilty is a mere irregularity not constituting reversible error.⁴

§ 809. Determination and Disposition of Cause

On further judicial review of compensation proceedings, the court may grant such necessary relief as the case may warrant.

On further judicial review of compensation proceedings, the court may grant such necessary relief as the particular case may warrant,⁵ but the court cannot afford relief not authorized by the compensation act.⁶ Where the issues are separable, the court may affirm as to some and remand as to others.⁷ The appellate court may continue the award of compensation pending the appeal notwithstanding appellant has superseded the judgment of the court below affirming the award of the board.⁸ Where respondent files a remittitur of that part of the judgment tainted with error, the appellate court may enter an appropriate decree.⁹ The possibility that changed circumstances may have rendered the decree appealed from inappropriate in view of the lapse of time since evidence was heard does not call for action by the reviewing court in view of the availability of a remedy in the lower court.¹⁰

The appeal will be dismissed where the lower court did not have jurisdiction of the case¹¹ or where appellant with full knowledge of the facts voluntarily accepts the benefits of the judgment appealed from.¹² The court will not determine the liability of a person not a party to the appeal.¹³

Where it appears that the proper procedure for appeal to the court below was not taken, no relief will be afforded on appeal from its decision affirming the award of the commission.¹⁴ Where the judge of the superior court, in passing on an appeal from an award of the commission, has no discretionary power to set aside the award, a judgment affirming the commission's award will not be

General provisions inapplicable

Workmen's compensation act prescribes a complete and exclusive procedure of its own, and therefore civil code provisions relating to power of supreme court to enter judgment on appeal, under certain circumstances, as justice may require, and civil code provisions relating to other matters, may not be borrowed to supplement provisions of workmen's compensation act.

13. Liability of insurance carriers

In workmen's compensation proceedings brought by employee who allegedly lost his left eye as result of infection caused by dust particles entering his eye while he was engaged in cleaning up operations entailing shoveling debris into wagon, wherein it appeared that employee had been industrially blind in his left eye at time of his employment and that after his employment, but prior to enucleation, he had sustained impairment of right eye vision as result of industrial accident, insurer affording coverage at time of right eye injury not being a party to appeal taken by employer and its (different) insurer from award in its (different) case, supreme court would not determine liability of each of insurance carriers with respect to claims for injuries to respective eyes.

On further judicial review, the judgment below will be affirmed where no error appears.

Where the record before the court on further review of a compensation proceeding shows nothing improper, the judgment must be affirmed.¹⁶ Where the appellate court is equally divided, the judgment below will be affirmed.¹⁷ An affirmance may be entered pursuant to an agreement of the parties.¹⁸

Affirmance is proper where the judgment is correct despite an error in the findings¹⁹ or the procedure.²⁰ A judgment which is excessive may be affirmed on condition that there is a remittitur of the excess.²¹ Where rules of court require briefs on appeal, for failure to comply therewith, a judgment affirming an award may be affirmed.²²

A judgment remanding the cause to the commission for further evidence to support its findings must

Effect of affirmance

(1) Affirmance by reviewing court of judgment of trial court in workmen's compensation case had effect of making that judgment the judgment of the reviewing court.

Tex.—Morton v. Federal Underwriters

Exchange, Civ.App., 173 S.W.2d 515.

(2) Where compensation case was affirmed by court of civil appeals, trial court lost jurisdiction of case and properly refused to consider new evidence.

Tex.—Texas Emp. Ins. Ass'n v. Elder, 282 S.W.2d 371.

(3) Affirmance by reviewing court of judgment for claimant in workmen's compensation proceeding rendered moot question of whether supersedeas should have been granted.

D.C.—Harris v. Britton, 218 F.2d 45, 95 U.S.App.D.C. 32.

Constitutionality of statute

Judgment awarding compensation would be affirmed subject to determination in pending appeal of reasonableness of compensation schedules of 1937 Act.

Pa.—Mattey v. Jones & Laughlin Steel Corp., 38 A.2d 410, 155 Pa. Super. 360—Barbaryka v. Henderson Coal Co., 36 A.2d 341, 154 Pa. Super. 402.

Death of party

Judgment dismissing appeal from compensation award making effective award as against one of two defendants without regard to rights or liabilities of codefendant except as they were incidentally involved would be affirmed, notwithstanding death of codefendant pending appeal, where claim might originally have been made against surviving defendant alone.

Conn.—Lucarelli v. Earle C. Dodds, Inc., 136 A. 641, 121 Conn. 640.

Limitations on scope of review

In workmen's compensation case, limitations on scope of review on appeal from superior court decree dismissing claim on petition for review of decision of industrial accident board, which dismissed claim for lack of jurisdiction, did not preclude affirmance of decree.

Mass.—Rocha's Case, 14 N.E.2d 133, 300 Mass. 121.

Counsel fee

(1) Where compensation referee made award in favor of claimant and allowed him twenty-five per cent for attorney's fee, and award was reversed by industrial commission, and circuit court then reversed and set aside final award of commission and entered judgment for plaintiff in stated amount, and that judgment was affirmed by supreme court, award of referee allowing attorney's fee passed out of case.

Mo.—Sanderson v. Producers Commission Ass'n, App., 241 S.W.2d 273.

(2) Where question of attorney's fees was never raised in trial court on appeal from an award of commission, such court cannot, after affirmance of its judgment and remand to it for execution, enter a judgment for attorney's fees.

Interest

(1) Judgment would be reformed so as to omit provision for interest which employee failed to claim in his pleadings.

Tex.—Texas Indemnity Ins. Co. v. Briggs, Civ. App., 128 S.W.2d 861, error dismissed, judgment correct.

(2) Error in entering judgment allowing interest on past-due workmen's compensation payments to claimant not suing for interest did not require reversal of award by court of additional compensation for total incapacity, as judgment could be reformed and affirmed.

Tex.—Zurich General Acc. & Liability Ins. Co. v. Young, Civ. App., 202 S.W.2d 338, error refused no reversible error.

Costs

Where plaintiff instituted suit in forma pauperis for workmen's compensation benefits, and judgment for employer inadvertently assessed costs of court against him, judgment would be modified absolving plaintiff from payment of any costs.

La.—Williams v. Sewerage & Water Bd. of New Orleans, App., 68 So. 2d 582.

As in civil actions generally, on appeal from judgments in actions on awards in compensation cases, on further review, the court may in a proper case modify or correct the judgment.²⁷ The court may remedy clerical errors in descriptions of injuries,²⁸ and may modify the judgment to provide for its review as required by statute.²⁹ It may strike out erroneous allowances and affirm the judgment as reformed,³⁰ or reduce the judgment to a proper amount.³¹

Where a mathematical error has been made in computing the compensation award, the court may correct it.³² Where a judgment contains an improper or void provision the judgment will be modified by eliminating such provision.³³

The court cannot modify the amount of the award unless there are sufficient conceded facts in the record to justify such action.³⁴ On appeal from a judgment affirming an award for a lump sum without pleading and evidence of a proper rate of discount, the court cannot reform the judgment to allow recovery of the weekly payments where claimant has not waived his right to try the issue of lump sum settlement below.³⁵

Where no error appears, the judgment will not be modified.³⁶ A respondent who has not filed a cross appeal may not obtain a modification of the judgment in his favor.³⁷

§ 812. — Reversal

On further review, the judgment in a compensation case will be reversed where erroneous.

On further review, the judgment in a compensation case will be reversed where erroneous,³⁸ but, as discussed supra § 808, the judgment will not be reversed for harmless error, and it has been held that an award of compensation will not be reversed

Effect of judgment of reversal

(1) Judgment of supreme court reversing judgment of court of appeals which reversed judgment of superior court affirming workmen's compensation award became judgment of court of appeals and its prior judgment was vacated and judgment of superior court was affirmed.

Ga.—Ocean Accident & Guarantee Corporation v. Carter, 12 S.E.2d 414, 63 Ga.App. 844.

(2) Reversal of judgment of district court awarding compensation to sister of deceased employee, on employer's appeal, held not to restore to widow benefit of award made by compensation commissioner, where widow did not appeal from judgment of district court.

Kan.—Tisdale v. Wilson & Co., 43 P.2d 1064, 141 Kan. 885.

(3) Where employer and insurance carrier appealing from superior court judgment reversing award of board of workmen's compensation denying compensation did not procure a supersedeas, claimant had a right to have an award entered in his favor by board, and right to have award affirmed by superior court pending appeal, but such subsequent proceedings were rendered nugatory by judgment of court of appeals reversing judgment of superior court and affirming original award denying compensation.

Ga.—American Mut. Liability Ins. Co. v. Ellison, 62 S.E.2d 656, 82 Ga.App. 712.

(4) Judgment of county court acting in excess of its jurisdiction in setting aside findings of workmen's compensation board was a nullity and reversal thereof would in effect reinstate order of board without necessity of remitting record for further proceedings.

Pa.—Bogavich v. Westinghouse Elec. & Mfg. Co., 57 A.2d 598, 162 Pa. Super. 888.

(5) Where employer ceased payment of compensation awarded in first action and compensation claimant then brought a second original action for additional compensation in which compensation judge increased award but allowed credit for compensation previously paid, on reversal of a district court judgment reversing award in second action compensation claimant was entitled to award made by compensation judge in second action.

Neb.—Rexroat v. State, 7 N.W.2d 163, 142 Neb. 596.

(6) Where court affirmed a decision of industrial accident commission, a reversal of judgment of court carried with it a reversal of commission's order.

Md.—Porter v. Bethlehem-Fairfield Shipyard, 53 A.2d 668, 138 Md. 668.

(7) Where effect of mandate of supreme court on reversal was to require trial to set aside prior order on industrial commission in its entirety, including prior findings of fact, no findings of fact remained on which to base a claim of res judicata on a subsequent appeal.

Wis.—M. & M. Realty Co. v. Industrial Commission, 64 N.W.2d 413, 267 Wis. 52.

(8) Where court affirmed a decision of industrial accident commission which denied claimant all relief to which he was entitled, a reversal of judgment of court carried with it a reversal of commission's order so far as it was adverse to employee's claim.

Md.—Porter v. Bethlehem-Fairfield Shipyard, supra.

General principles

On motion to vacate judgment, entered in district court to enforce industrial commission's award, on ground of mistake of fact, court must be governed by same considerations and principles that govern vacation of any judgment of district court.

Minn.—Maffett v. Citizens Bank, 270 N.W. 596, 193 Minn. 480.

On appeal the affirmance of an award will be reversed where the court failed to pass on a question of law,⁴⁰ and a reversal of an award will itself be reversed where the award was supported by competent evidence.⁴¹ Where the lower court in a suit to set aside an award dismissed the cause for failure to give notice of dissatisfaction before filing suit, its judgment will be reversed where the failure to give notice before filing suit prejudiced no one, and notice was in fact given thereafter.⁴² The rule that a judgment granting a first new trial will not be disturbed where the law and the facts do not require the verdict does not apply to a review of a judgment setting aside an award of the commission which may be reversed.⁴³

Where, in a suit to set aside an award, insurer impleaded a third person, the judgment will not be reversed because the award against insurer was larger than the judgment in favor of insurer against the third person.⁴⁴ A judgment for claimant on appeal from an award denying compensation must be reversed where based on an erroneous conclusion of law that the court is not bound by the provisions of the compensation act.⁴⁵ On such an appeal the judgment will not be reversed for matters not affecting the merits,⁴⁶ such as informalities in the verdict.⁴⁷ On appeal to a court from an order of a board, where the court has no power to substitute its findings for those of the board a decision by it, reversing the board's order, must be reversed where it can be supported only by findings made by the court.⁴⁸

§ 813. — Remand

On further review, the court may remand the case to the lower court or may direct the lower court to remand the matter to the compensation authorities.

As in civil actions generally, on further review, the court may remand a cause to the lower court on appeal from its judgment in actions on compensation awards, or may direct the lower court to remand the matter to the compensation authorities.⁴⁹

Exercise of power depends on circumstances

Where workmen's compensation bureau awarded compensation on ground accident "could have been" proximate cause of fatal disease, court of common pleas could have remanded cause to bureau for performance of bureau's duty to make a specific finding and determination, and, on certiorari, supreme court could so remand cause where common pleas court failed to do so, but whether supreme court would exercise its power to remand would depend on the particular circumstances. N.J.—Calicchio v. Jersey City Stock Yards Co., 14 A.2d 465, 135 N.J. Law 112.

New evidence

In workmen's compensation proceeding wherein supreme court entered judgment determining that one of two claimants was widow of employee, but before judgment became final a witness was discovered who without dispute was legally married to successful claimant during time she allegedly was married to employee, supreme court had authority to remand proceeding to circuit court so that new evidence could be presented and rights of parties determined according to true facts.

Miss.—Hill v. United Timber & Lumber Co., 78 So.2d 247, 221 Miss. 473.

Counsel fees

(1) Appellate court was without power to reverse judgment in favor of employee under compensation act and remand the cause to trial court as between insurance carrier and employee who had agreed on a settlement and at same time retain jurisdiction over appeal so far as it affected the award of attorney's fees to counsel for employee who was not a party to the suit or the appeal. Tex.—Consolidated Underwriters v. Trevino, Civ.App., 124 S.W.2d 861.

(2) Where workmen's compensation claimant successfully appealed from judgment notwithstanding verdict and trial court had not determined fee of his attorney, court of civil appeals would reverse judgment and remand cause with instructions to render judgment on verdict and determine attorney's fees.

Further evidence

In proceeding for compensation for partial dependency on deceased employee, where full hearing had been had, but case was recommitted to industrial accident board to state evidential basis of its determination of amount of employee's contribution toward support of dependents, parties were not entitled to have further evidence received.

Amplification of finding

Court will sustain general finding of reviewing board in compensation case if possible, and will be slow to order case recommitted to board for amplification of its findings on issue not shown to have been fairly brought to attention of board and seriously put in dispute.

court failed to fix the amount of the award,⁵⁵ where the pleadings and evidence fail to show an excuse for not filing the claim in time,⁵⁶ for correction of the order for judgment,⁵⁷ or where the lower court allowed compensation on an erroneous theory.⁵⁸

Where no facts remain to be determined or developed, the court on further review may enter final judgment and need not remand the case.⁵⁹ On review of a judgment affirming an award the court will not remand for detailed findings where the evidence is undisputed but will regard the evidence as though it were the findings.⁶⁰ A judgment approving the board's order dismissing a compensation claim will not be reversed for reference to the board to make separate factual findings required by statute, where no valid claim for additional compensation existed.⁶¹ The case will not be remanded for the taking of evidence on an immaterial matter.⁶² Where findings are undisputed and there is no justification for remand, the court may, on reversing, render judgment,⁶³ but a remand is necessary where the case has not been fully developed or a matter remains open for determination.⁶⁴

Where the court on further review is authorized to make an independent determination of the facts, as discussed supra § 807, it tends to make a final disposition of the case rather than to remand it where it does not appear that additional evidence can be presented.⁶⁵ The matter should be remanded where it appears probable that a deficiency in the evidence may be cured on a further hearing.⁶⁶ The appellate court should not make a final disposition of the case where it is of the opinion that, through inadvertence or otherwise, the facts have not been fully developed.⁶⁷ Thus, in the interests of justice, the court may remand the case to permit the presentation of evidence which the parties failed to present at the original hearing.⁶⁸

Absence of finding

(1) Ordinarily, in compensation case, subsidiary findings are required in order that reviewing court may determine whether ultimate finding was based on correct principles of law, but further findings were not necessary and case would not be remanded to superior court where it sufficiently appeared that employee, at time of his death, was engaged in business affairs of his employer and received fatal injuries arising from risk of street.

On reversal of a judgment on appeal from an award the reviewing court will reverse and remand, but will not render judgment where the evidence is insufficient to enable it to compute the compensation to be awarded,⁶⁹ or where there is no sufficient evidence to show jurisdiction or the lack of it,⁷⁰ and where the lower court was without jurisdiction of the appeal because no notice of appeal was given, the reviewing court will remand, rather than render judgment.⁷¹

Where the court below was without jurisdiction on appeal the court will reverse and remand for dismissal rather than dismiss⁷² notwithstanding an award denying compensation was affirmed on appeal.⁷³ Under the practice in some jurisdictions, where the judgment is reversed as against the weight of the evidence, the appellate court cannot render final judgment but must remand the case for a new trial.⁷⁴ The appellate court may not enter judgment contrary to the findings of the jury and, in such case, the matter must be remanded.⁷⁵ Where the lower court is authorized only to confirm or set aside an award made by the compensation authorities, the higher court may not fix the amount of the award and direct the lower court to enter judgment for that amount.⁷⁶

Where the case was tried on the wrong theory, it must be remanded for a complete retrial.⁷⁷

Remand with directions. On further review, the court may remand the case with directions as to the action to be taken.⁷⁸ Where a retrial is not necessary, the appellate court may remand the case with directions as to the judgment to be entered.⁷⁹ On appeal from an order of the court below remanding a cause to the board or commission instead of entering final judgment, the reviewing court may remand to the lower court with instructions to enter a final judgment.⁸⁰ Where the court below reversed an award allowing compensation, the reviewing court may in a proper case remand with instruction to the lower court to enter judgment for claimant.⁸¹ Where the question of relationship of employer and employee was not litigated before the commission, a judgment vacating the award should be reversed and remanded with instructions to remand to the commission for determination of the question.⁸² On remand the court may direct amendment of claimant's application for compensation.⁸³

The lower court must comply with the order or directions of the higher court.⁸⁴

ment of the lower court affirming an award it cannot, in the absence of proper grounds, and as a matter of favor, grant a new trial.⁸⁶ Unless so permitted by the compensation act, the reviewing court cannot grant a new trial for newly discovered evidence.⁸⁷

§ 815. Rehearing

An application for rehearing of the appeal is addressed to the discretion of the court.

As in a case on appeals generally, an application for the rehearing of an appeal in a compensation case is addressed to the discretion of the court.⁸⁸

The court will refuse a petition for a rehearing where all the questions raised were fully argued and considered by the court in reaching its original conclusion.⁸⁹ A party cannot obtain a rehearing of the appeal on the basis of new factual matter⁹⁰ or on the basis of errors not previously urged.⁹¹ The general rule denying a rehearing to a litigant who is not diligent is not to be applied in all strictness in compensation cases.⁹² A rehearing will not be granted after affirmance of a judgment sustaining an award where the evidence warrants the conclusions of the reviewing court as to the raising of particular issues.⁹³

16. LIABILITY ON BOND OR SECURITY

§ 816(1). In General

General rules apply as to liability on appeal bonds in compensation cases.

The general rules, as discussed in Appeal and Error § 2004 et seq, as to liability on appeal bonds apply with respect to liability on appeal bonds in compensation cases.⁹⁴ The principal and surety on appeal bond are liable for the payment of the award where the award is affirmed⁹⁵ or if the appeal is dismissed.⁹⁶ Liability on an appeal bond does not extend to any and all awards that may be rendered in connection with the case,⁹⁷ but does extend to such award as may be made in order to comply with the mandate of the appellate court if the award sought to be reviewed is affirmed in whole or part.⁹⁸

Liability on a bond given on certiorari from an award is terminated when the award is set aside on the ground of lack of jurisdiction.⁹⁹ The surety

on a bond filed to obtain a review of a compensation award is not liable for the payment of a subsequent award made after the setting aside of the award appealed from.¹ Where the appeal is successful, the surety is discharged and is not liable for the costs imposed on the appellant by reason of a further appeal.²

An employer's bond required to obtain certiorari to review a decision of the board may continue in effect many years, where periodical compensation payments are directed,³ and operates to secure payment of the award under final determination of the case adversely to claimant by the supreme court on writ of error to review the judgment of the circuit court.⁴ The surety on an appeal bond is discharged from liability where the act authorizing a claimant to procure a lump sum settlement, subject to rejection by the employer, was amended after the bond

New trial before compensation authorities

Supreme court has power, through its mandate to circuit court, to authorize industrial commission to undertake further proceeding in nature of a new trial by directing that circuit court remand record to commission for further proceeding.

was given so as to take away the option of rejection, and the surety is not liable for a lump sum settlement awarded after the passage of such amendment.⁵

Where the employer paid the award on his insurer's insolvency, the employer can recover the payment from the surety on the appeal bond.⁶

§ 816(2). Determination of Liability

The compensation commission may be authorized to determine liability on an appeal bond.

Where a bond is required before the review of a commission's award, the commission may, after its award has been sustained, determine the liability of the surety on the bond.⁷ The reviewing court is not, it has been held, authorized to render judgment on the appeal bond on affirming an award.⁸

An action against the surety on the bond, on the theory of subrogation, may be maintained in any court of general jurisdiction.⁹

O. COSTS, EXPENSES, AND ATTORNEY'S FEES

§ 817. Attorney's Fees

The right to, and the liability for, attorney's fees is discussed infra §§ 818-822.

Examine Pocket Parts for later cases.

sation cases is wholly dependent on the provisions of the compensation acts, and fees are allowable only in such proceedings and in such circumstances as the statutes permit.

An allowance for an attorney's fee cannot be made unless expressly authorized by the compensation act,¹⁰ and then only in the proceeding in which

Attorney representing employer

Workmen's compensation policy, obligating insurer to defend for employer all suits and proceedings instituted against employer and obligating insurer to pay costs taxed against employer in any legal proceeding defended by insurer, did not authorize court to fix compensation of attorney representing employer in workmen's compensation proceeding and assess such compensation against insurer; and a statute providing that on rendition of a judgment against an insurer in favor of beneficiary under any policy, there shall be adjudged against insurer and in favor of beneficiary a reasonable sum as compensation for his attorneys cannot be employed to place on an insurance carrier in workmen's compensation proceeding burden of indemnifying employer or employee for cost of services rendered by counsel.

Effect of invalidity of statute

Invalidity of amendatory provision of workmen's compensation statute raising fees of prevailing claimant's

the statute authorizes the allowance.¹¹ Under some statutes a claim for legal services must be made or presented to the commission.¹² An award of compensation is a prerequisite to an award of attorney's fees.¹³

Under some compensation acts provision is made for the allowance of attorney's fees,¹⁴ some authorizing them in special instances, as where the employer refuses or willfully neglects to comply with the requirements of the compensation act as to insuring his liability thereunder;¹⁵ but this provision does not apply to refusal to pay compensation awarded where the employer has complied with the requirements.¹⁶ Under other provisions such fees are allowed where, after the award of compensation, the employer does not institute proceedings for its review, and refuses to pay it.¹⁷ Likewise, attorney's fees may be awarded where compensation is not paid within the time prescribed by the statute,¹⁸ or where attorney and making one-half of such fees chargeable against employer did not affect valid provisions of prior statute with respect to attorney fees. Ky.—Vestal Lumber Co. v. Clark, 268 S.W.2d 954—Burns v. Shepherd, 264 S.W.2d 685.

Effect of offer to pay compensation. Letter from insurance carrier advising that it stood ready and willing to pay compensation in satisfaction with accident in question, but, pending that investigation and report, the employer unsuccessfully resists payment of an award;¹⁹ but if, within the prescribed time the employer or insurer recognizes the compensable nature of the claim and begins payment, an award of attorney's fees is not justified.²⁰ Under some statutes attorney's fees may be awarded where the insurer discontinues or withholds payment capriciously, unlawfully, arbitrarily, and without probable cause;²¹ but attorney's fees will not be allowed where insurer did not act arbitrarily or capriciously.²²

torney's fees against insurer but not against the employer.²³ Under some provisions a settlement of a claim for compensation may defeat an allowance of attorney's fees if the settlement is made before knowledge of the employment of the attorney was brought home to the employer and his insurer.²⁴ Notice to the employer that claimant had hired attorneys constitutes notice to insurer.²⁵ Under some compensation acts the fee of the attorney representing claimant before the board or in a suit brought to set aside its final decisions is to be paid out of the amount recovered by claimant.²⁶ A statute pro-mination of lawful beneficiaries was function of industrial commission, was not such compliance with requirements of act as would avoid invoking its requirement to pay claim, and successful claimants were by statute entitled to award of attorneys' fees to be paid by carrier, since willingness to pay "compensation" is not same as willingness to pay a specific claim.

Fla.—Great Am. Indem. Co. v. Williams, 85 So.2d 619.

Nonpayment pending investigation

(1) Compensation insurance carrier of an employer has a reasonable time to investigate a claim, and no penalty should be imposed on carrier for reasonably investigating a claim; time for such investigation being always relevant.

Fla.—Balatsos v. Nebraska Ave. Cafe & Liquor Store, 30 So.2d 633, 159 Fla. 71.

(2) Where employer's insurance carrier did not deny liability, and differential of time between notice of claim and first hearing was used by carrier to make needful investigations of claims, but in meantime all but one of claimants were receiving their regular salaries and remaining claimant had benefit of loan or advance in excess of deceased employee's salary, it was proper not to assess attorney's fees against carrier.

Fla.—Balatsos v. Nebraska Ave. Cafe & Liquor Store, supra.

(3) Where insurance carrier was ready and willing to pay compensation, but question existed as to which of five claimants were proper beneficiaries, burden was on industrial commission or deputy commissioner to make investigation to determine this question, and claimants were entitled to representation at investigation, and attorneys' fees could be imposed against carrier under statute.

Fla.—Great Am. Indem. Co. v. Williams, 85 So.2d 619.

Necessity of demand

Statutory provision for payment of attorney's fees in compensation proceedings is predicated on failure to make payment within sixty days after demand, and where no such period has elapsed, award of attorney's fees would be improper.

La.—Moore v. Travelers Ins. Co., App., 79 So.2d 507.

19. Fla.—Lockett v. Smith, 72 So.2d 817.

Construction of statute

Salutary purpose of provision of compensation act that if employer or insurance carrier unsuccessfully resists payment of compensation awarded employee by industrial commission, reasonable attorney's fee shall also be awarded him, should not be nullified by restrictive interpretation, and any doubt as to its construction will be resolved in employee's favor.

Payments by another employer

Continued wage payments to a workmen's compensation claimant, after her injury, by another employer, would not excuse insurer of claimant's employer at time of her injury from withholding payment of weekly compensation or absolve it from liability for attorney's fees imposed for arbitrary and capricious failure to pay compensation due a disabled employee.

Uninsured employer

Provision in workmen's compensation act for twelve per cent of award as damages and for reasonable attorney's fees for arbitrary failure to pay compensation is a penalty applicable only to insurers who capriciously refuse to pay benefits within sixty days after proof of loss and did not apply to an employer who was uninsured.

viding that fees of attorneys under the act shall be reasonable and measured according to the workman's station and shall be approved by the court does not impose such fee as additional liability on the employer.²⁷ Attorney's fees expended by insurer in successfully defending a common-law action wrongfully brought by the employee against the employer to recover for injuries suffered cannot be credited by the compensation board or commission on the amount awarded the employee as compensation under the act.²⁸ It has been held that the board has no power to adjudicate between the attorney of record and counsel with respect to allowance of fees.²⁹

Proceeding on self-insurer's bond. In a proceeding against the surety on a self-insurer's bond to enforce an award of the commission against the employer, even though the bond provides for the payment of reasonable attorney's fees, where the amount of the award and the attorney's fees combined exceed the penal sum of the bond, the award of attorney's fees, to the extent that the combined award exceeds the amount of the bond, must be disallowed.³⁰

Unnecessary proceedings. The court does not err in failing to fix claimant's attorney's fees as provided in the compensation act where defendant is willing and ready to pay the amount due plaintiff and the proceedings are wholly unnecessary and produce nothing.³¹ Under a statute which provides for the assessment of a reasonable attorney's fee against a party who, without reasonable ground, has brought, prosecuted, or defended proceedings under the workmen's compensation act, a party who acts on a reasonable and honest, although mistaken, opinion is not liable for such attorney's fees.³² Fees may not be awarded where the action is defended and continued on reasonable grounds.³³

Appointment of legal representation. In some jurisdictions the compensation act provides for the payment of the expenses of the appointment of a legal representative of a deceased employee where such legal representative is required for the carrying out of the provisions of the compensation act.³⁴

Amount recovered

Where attorney's contract for fees in a workman's compensation case provided that he was to receive certain percentage of amount recovered, amount of attorney's fee would be based on percentage of money actually received by claimant and his personal representative and not on a percentage of original award entered, since word recovered as used in contract meant actual receipt of money by claimant.

Determination of right to compensation

Attorney's right to compensation for services in a compensation case, including services rendered in connection with appointment of legal representative of deceased employee, is determinable under workmen's compensation act in proceeding between attorney and employee or his legal representative, dependents or other persons to whom compensation may be payable.

Mass.—Whittaker's Case, 66 N.E.2d 785, 319 Mass. 582.

Duty of insurer to pay

Mass.—Whittaker's Case, supra.

Nature of services

Services rendered by attorney in connection with appointment of legal representative of deceased employee ordinarily are not "services rendered in connection with a compensation case" within statute making attorneys' fees for services rendered in connection with such a case subject to approval of industrial accident board; but where appointment of legal representative of deceased employee is required to comply with compensation law, legal services in connection with such appointment are "services in connection with compensation case," and, if such services are not furnished by insurer, compensation therefor is a part of attorneys' fees for services under workmen's compensation act so as to be subject to approval of industrial accident board.

Mass.—Whittaker's Case, supra.

Effect of findings

Finding of industrial accident board that attorney for claimant was not entitled to be paid by claimant for services rendered in having claimant appointed administratrix meant that board found that attorney was not entitled to be paid for such services as a part of his fees in workmen's compensation case.

Mass.—Whittaker's Case, 66 N.E.2d 785, 319 Mass. 582.

Lay representative. Under a compensation act which provides that a party litigant before the commission may be represented by one not admitted to practice law and authorizes the commission to fix and determine and allow as a lien against the award a reasonable attorney's fee for legal services, it is proper for the commission to fix the amount to be paid a lay representative of claimant for his services.³⁵

§ 819. — On Appeal or Proceeding to Set Aside Award

Attorney's fees are allowable on appeals from decisions in workmen's compensation proceedings only when, and under such terms and conditions as, authorized by statute.

Fee fixed by trial court

(1) In compensation proceeding, reviewing court could not fix the fees to which counsel for claimant were entitled, since such was function of trial court.

(2) Determination of employer's liability to injured workman for compensation claimed is "proceeding" in both district and appellate courts, but statutory authority to allow additional attorneys' fees is reposed in trial court alone.

Term "legal proceedings" in provision of workmen's compensation law providing that costs of legal proceedings should include attorney's fees to be fixed by trial court means proceedings on appeal to court of common pleas from action of industrial commission.

Ohio.—Carson v. Beall, 3 N.E.2d 729, 55 Ohio App. 245.

Absence of appeal

Statute prohibiting attorney, engaged in appeal to superior court from order of joint board of department of labor and industries on application for rehearing by party aggrieved by department's order, from charging or receiving any fee therein exceeding reasonable fee fixed by court is inapplicable, in absence of such appeal, and word "therein" has no reference to services of attorney before joint board or in supreme court on appeal from superior court.

Wash.—Bodine v. Department of Labor and Industries, 190 P.2d 89, 29 Wash.2d 879.

Proceedings to procure

(1) Approved practice obtaining in supreme court for awarding attorney's fees in workmen's compensation cases is on appropriate motion filed in cause, and request should be separated from an assertion of claimant.

Fla.—City of Miami v. Portz, 80 So. 2d 30—Perrin v. Tanner Grocery Co., 46 So.2d 836.

(2) Where no service of motion of claimant's attorneys for allowance of additional attorneys' fees over and above twenty-five per cent allowed by workmen's compensation commission was had on attorneys for employer and compensation insurance carrier on appeal from award of commission, supreme court would not pass on motion.

Miss.—Jackson Ready-Mix Concrete v. Young, 93 So.2d 645.

(3) Proper pleading with respect to attorney's fees in workmen's compenensation suit was necessary to warrant court fixing fee and entering judgment therefor.

Tex.—Employers' Liability Assur. Corporation v. Sims, Civ.App., 67 S.W.2d 445, error refused.

In the absence of statute authorizing the allowance of attorney's fees to claimant in appeals from the decision in a workmen's compensation proceeding, the court is without power to do so,³⁶ and any party in order to be entitled to attorney's fees must come within the provisions of the act.³⁷ Provisions authorizing attorney's fees where the employer does not institute proceedings for the review of the award, and refuses to pay it, do not include any attorney fees sustained by the employee in having the award reviewed in the circuit court or in the supreme court.³⁸

In some jurisdictions the compensation act provides for the allowance of a reasonable attorney fee to the party prevailing on an appeal from an award.³⁹ Thus, under some compensation acts,

Employer successful on appeal

(1) An attorney's fee for services performed in circuit court is allowed to an employer under compensation act on successful appeal by employer seeking relief from burden of assessment against his class following an award by department of labor and industries, where controversy is between an injured workman or dependents of a deceased workman, and department.

State as employer

Under statute providing that if employer in compensation case appeals to district court or supreme court and fails to obtain reduction in amount of award, costs may be allowed for reasonable attorney's fee against employer, state, where impleaded under the "second injury" provision of the statute, would not be an "employer," and employee could not recover attorney's fees arising on state's appeals to district court and supreme court.

Neb.—Franzen v. Blakley, 52 N.W. 2d 833, 155 Neb. 621.

Award in supreme court

(1) Words "in like manner," in provision of compensation act authorizing attorney's fees on appeals to district court and "in like manner" on appeals to supreme court, refer to provision dealing with granting of fees in district court, and authorize supreme court to allow fees in a like manner as district court.

(2) Employee, who resisted action brought by employer, employer's compensation carrier and another in compensation court on ground that employee's injury did not arise out of, and in course of, her employment and, therefore, was not within compensation act, who brought action at common law for employer's alleged negligence, who appealed from award of compensation entered by workmen's compensation court who succeeded in having action vacated, and dismissed in district court, but who was not successful in supreme court, was not entitled to have attorney's fees allowed and taxed as costs.

Change of date of commencement of compensation

In workmen's compensation proceeding wherein employer appealed to district court from action of compensation commissioner, and on appeal date of commencement of payment under award was fixed at later date than that fixed by commissioner, such change amounted to "reduction of award" and hence district court was deprived of authority to allow attorney's fee for plaintiff's attorney.

Appeal on reasonable grounds. Appeal from award of compensation board directing employer and its insurance carrier to pay attorney's fees.

acts an attorney's fee may be allowed the employee where insurer appeals to a reviewing board and the employee receives some compensation even though the amount is reduced.⁴⁴

Where, on successful appeal from the order of the commission, claimant is entitled to attorney's fees, he cannot recover attorney's fees where by negotiation he secures a cancellation of an order of the board terminating his compensation and a reinstatement of his compensation.⁴⁵ In a proceeding to set aside a compensation award minor defendants, on successfully defending the award, are entitled to have a reasonable attorney's fee for the attorney ad litem appointed to represent them taxed as a part of the costs.⁴⁶ Under a compensation act which provides that, where insurer fails or refuses to obey a compensation award and fails or refuses to bring suit to set it aside claimant on bringing suit and securing judgment sustaining such award is entitled, in addition to the award, to a reasonable attorney's fee for the prosecution of the claim, the failure of insurer to make the husband of claimant a party to a suit to set aside the compensation award is not such an error as renders the suit to set aside the award of no effect so as to entitle claimant to an allowance for attorney's fees in her attempt to enforce the award.⁴⁷ Where counsel is employed on a contingent basis, to receive a specified percentage of any increase in compensation then being paid to claimant, and no increase is procured, a refusal to award attorney's fees is proper.⁴⁸

Some statutory provisions have been held limited in application to reviews on appeal from the award of the compensation commission;⁴⁹ and to have no application to other appeals⁵⁰ or to review by certiorari;⁵¹ but under other provisions attorney's fees may be allowed in such case.⁵²

Increase of amount on appeal. A power given the trial court to fix a reasonable fee will not permit a court on appeal to increase the amount allowed because of the labor involved in the appeal.⁵³ In some jurisdictions, however, under the statutes therein, the industrial commission⁵⁴ or the appellate court⁵⁵ may award an additional fee to the atney's fees directly to claimant's attorney after employer had settled with claimant and paid him a lump sum without consulting claimant's attorney had merit, and hence claimant's motion for additional attorney's fees on ground that appeal was without reasonable grounds was properly denied.

Proceeding for mandamus

Statute providing that in proceedings brought against workmen's compensation bureau cost of such proceedings including a reasonable attorney's fee shall be taxed against bureau, does not authorize district court to allow an attorney's fee, except in a case where an appeal is taken from final action of bureau in denying right of a claimant to participate at all in workmen's compensation fund, and has no application to a proceeding for purpose of obtaining a writ of mandamus to allow inspection of bureau's records. for services rendered in certiorari proceeding instituted by claimant in supreme court and for services rendered on two appeals by claimant to court of errors and appeals.

Affirmance changed to reversal on rehearing

Where disposition of case on appeal from judgment awarding compensation for employee's death is changed on rehearing from affirmance to reversal and remand for new trial, allowance by supreme court's former opinion of attorney's fees to plaintiff for services in such court should be vacated without prejudice to claimant's rights to allowance therefor if she subsequently prevails.

N.M.—Gonzales v. Sharp & Fellows Contracting Co., 153 P.2d 676, 48 N.M. 528.

"Determination of cause on appeal" is not "trial" within statute authorizing court trying cause to increase compensation of attorneys for injured workman collecting through court proceedings compensation exceeding amount previously tendered by employer.

N.M.—New Mexico State Highway Department v. Bible, 34 P.2d 295, 38 N.M. 372.

Unsuccessful appeal by commission or board

(1) Statute entitling claimant to attorneys' fees on commission's unsuccessful appeal from adverse decision of circuit court is based on ethical principle that defeated appellant should pay attorney's fee of his successful antagonist; but fee should not be made so burdensome that commission will be deterred from resorting to courts on claims which it believes are without merit. Or.—King v. State Indus. Acc. Commission, 318 P.2d 272.

(2) Where cause presented difficulties, but claimant did not ask for more, court was justified in embracing minimum amounts specified in advisory schedules promulgated by Bar in fixing amount to be awarded for attorneys' fees on commission's unsuccessful appeal from adverse decision of circuit court.

Or.—King v. State Indus. Acc. Commission, supra.

(8) Even though attorneys for claimant had performed effective service for their client and had secured for her amount of compensation which might be large, and issues involved were difficult, supreme court would not, on commission's unsuccessful appeal, be justified in allowing, for services rendered in supreme court by claimant's attorney, fees larger than those fixed in advisory schedules of minimum fees and charges promulgated by State Bar.

Or.—Mikolich v. State Indus. Acc. Commission, 318 P.2d 274.

Right not limited to securing of increased award

Where claimant for workmen's compensation for permanent partial disability appealed from award, and on appeal court found judgment erroneous in one particular against contention of defendants and in another against contention of claimant, court could allow claimant additional attorney's fee for services rendered on appeal.

N.M.—Mann v. Board of County Com'rs of Bernalillo County, 274 P.2d 145, 58 N.M. 628.

Effect of contract

Court cannot make new contract for parties, or add to terms of contract which they have made; and where there was included in record an agreement signed by workman and his attorneys whereby they agreed that a fee of twenty-five per cent would be paid to attorneys for services in case, contingent on amount of recovery, reviewing court, affirming compensation award, would not grant workman's attorneys' motion for allowance of additional attorneys' fee for services rendered on appeal.

Purpose of provision

(1) A provision of workmen's compensation law giving industrial commission right to supervise and pass on reasonableness of fees charged employers or claimants by attorneys contemplated employment of counsel and payment for services rendered by counsel and was intended to protect claimant as well as employer against excessive fee charges.

Ohio.—Carson v. Beall, 9 N.E.2d 729, 55 Ohio App. 245.

(2) Statutory provision that no charge, claim, or agreement for legal services or disbursements for attorney's fees in industrial accident cases is enforceable, valid, or binding in excess of a reasonable amount, and that commission may determine what constitutes reasonable amount, has purpose of protecting claimants before commission from exaction of excessive fees, and it constitutes professional misconduct for an attorney to secure or attempt to secure fees in excess of those allowed by commission.

Cal.—Coviello v. State Bar, 259 P.2d 7, 41 C.2d 273.

Contingent fee contract

(1) Under provision in compensation act requiring court approval of contingent fee contract between injured employee and his attorney with power to fix fee, where called on to do so court must judicially determine what fee employee should pay, as this impliedly denies to employee right to contract as to amount of fee.

Tex.—Postal Mut. Indemnity Co. v. Ellis, 169 S.W.2d 482, 140 Tex. 570.

(2) Compliance with provisions of compensation act making amount of attorney's contingent fee for services rendered in connection with workmen's compensation proceeding subject to approval by superior court, is a condition precedent to attorney's right to recover, in an action under Attorney's Lien Act, amount of his contingent fee for services rendered in workmen's compensation proceeding.

R.I.—Carty v. American Mut. Liability Ins. Co., 40 A.2d 597, 70 R.I. 472.

(3) Although contingent contracts between a compensation claimant and his attorney for fees are not favored and are unenforceable when they contravene the clear provisions of the compensation act, where they are reasonable and in full conformity with the provisions of the act, they are not against public policy; and even though a contingent contract between a compensation claimant and his attorney for fees is, because of its terms, found to be unenforceable, attorney, if his work has made possible granting of an award by industrial commission, without necessity of appeal to courts, is entitled to receive out of funds awarded, an amount equal to reasonable value of his services.

Ohio.—Szabo v. Warady, App., 44 N.E.2d 270.

(4) Contingent contract, whereby attorney was to receive from compensation claimant for legal services one-half of any award made by industrial commission, but in event no award was made attorney was to receive nothing, was invalid as against public policy declared in constitution.

Ohio.—Adkins v. Staker, 198 N.E. 575, 130 Ohio St. 198.

Presence of attorney

Under provision in compensation act authorizing court to fix reasonable attorney fee, presence of attorney who holds contract of employment, as party litigant, is not required, and court may fix fee and enter judgment on injured employee's pleadings, reserving beneficial title and interest to attorney, with right of enforcement in his own name, regardless of action of employee.

Contract held valid

A contract providing for reasonable fees for attorney's services before industrial commission in a sum not to exceed twenty per cent of compensation awarded, and for such sums as common pleas court might allow under statute in event of appeal to such court, was valid under statutes.

Ohio.—Carson v. Beall, 9 N.E.2d 729, 55 Ohio App. 245.

65. Mich.—Vollenweith v. General Motors Bldg. Corporation, 225 N.W. 542, 247 Mich. 271, 71 C.J. p. 1402 note 98.

Approval only after agreement

(1) Statute confers authority on industrial accident commission and courts to approve attorney's fee in compensation case only after client and attorney have agreed on amount, and confers no authority as to fee in absence of such agreement, save that, if dispute arises between attorney and commission concerning approval of fee, court may adjust dispute after parties thereto have submitted statements.

Or.—Davis v. State Industrial Accident Commission of Oregon, 68 P.2d 118, 156 Or. 893.

(2) Court is without authority to pass on reasonableness of attorney's fee charged in compensation case except where an agreement has been had between claimant and attorney.

Withdrawal of approval by claimant

Letter of compensation claimant approving claim for attorney's fee did not entitle attorney to approval of claim, where subsequent letter from claimant stated that she signed letter of approval through misunderstanding which she fully explained and asked that her approval be deemed withdrawn.

State Industrial Commission

(1) State industrial commission has exclusive original jurisdiction over fees to be allowed attorneys in proceedings before commission.

Okl.—Conrad v. State Industrial Commission, 73 P.2d 853, 181 Okl. 324.

(2) In proceeding for death benefit before state industrial commission, where record did not disclose excess of a statutory limitation may not be allowed.⁶⁸ The jurisdiction of the commission or administrator was represented by attorney but widow and children, proper parties because misjoinder was waived, were represented by attorneys, commission had exclusive original jurisdiction to fix attorneys' fees.

(3) Workmen's compensation act provision that claims for legal services in connection with any claim arising under act shall not be enforceable unless approved by industrial commission and, if so approved, shall become lien on compensation awarded but shall be paid therefrom only in manner fixed by commission applies only to claims for legal services rendered by claimant's attorney, and does not confer jurisdiction on commission to fix attorneys' fees for attorneys representing claimant's employer or his compensation carrier, but does confer jurisdiction on commission to fix and allow claims for attorneys' fees for attorneys representing claimant only.

Okl.—Butter Nut Baking Co. v. State Ins. Fund, 294 P.2d 842.

In Louisiana

(1) An employee recovering compensation for injuries sustained in course of employment was entitled to a decree in favor of his attorneys fixing amount of fee due attorneys under contract agreed on between employee and attorneys and as set out in employee's petition, fee not exceeding twenty per cent of amount of award or maximum fee of one thousand dollars.

(3) Attorney's fees provided for in provision of workmen's compensation law providing that costs should include attorney's fees to be fixed by trial court has reference to costs incurred in appeal to common pleas court, and not to services rendered before industrial commission in preliminary proceedings.

Ohio.—Carson v. Beall, 9 N.E.2d 729, 55 Ohio App. 245.

(4) Workmen's compensation law, providing that costs should include attorney's fees to be fixed by trial court in appeal from industrial commission to common pleas court, was not applicable to case involving right of attorneys to retain portion of compensation award as fee for services rendered in prosecuting workmen's compensation claim before industrial commission.

Ohio.—Thornton v. Graham, 6 Ohio Supp. 289.

(5) Section of compensation act applying to compensation for lawyers, which is taxed against industrial commission when a compensation claimant is successful in his appeal to court after being refused compensation on rehearing by commission, had no application with respect to fees charged by claimant's attorney for obtaining an additional award for claimant from industrial commission.

Ohio.—Szabo v. Warady, App., 44 N.E.2d 270.

Application of statute

(1) Limitation of twenty-five per cent set by workmen's compensation law for services of an attorney before compensation commission is not applicable to additional services rendered before superior courts; but in compensation proceedings to recover death benefits for widow and children of deceased employee, the fee for all services of attorneys of claimant, both for services rendered before commission, superior court, and supreme court should not exceed one third of sum recovered.

Miss.—Sunnyland Contracting Co. v. Davis, 75 So.2d 638, 221 Miss. 744.

(2) Where disability claim filed with industrial commission by attorneys for compensation claimant was dismissed because barred by limitations, and self-insured employer voluntarily paid claimant thereafter a certain amount for his injury, maximum attorney fee provision with respect to compensation claimant did not apply on ground that attorneys' fee did not arise from anything done before commission.

Ohio.—Calloway v. Hood, 51 N.E.2d 660, 72 Ohio App. 319.

Computation of amount

(1) Under statute limiting fees of an attorney who renders his service for an employee to twenty per cent of amount of award, award of attorney's fees could be based on twenty per cent of not merely total weekly compensation payments allowed, but on total judgment for claimant exclusive of penalties and attorney's fees, including compensation, medical expenses, and interest thereon.

La.—Guillory v. Coal Operators Cas. Co., App., 95 So.2d 201.

(2) Under provision that a proportion not exceeding twenty per cent of judgment is permissible for attorney's fees, "judgment" is a single entity, comprised of various component elements out of which it is aggregated, among which are medical, hospital, and analogous expenditures.

N.J.—Bobertz v. Hillside Tp., 19 A.2d 801, 126 N.J.Law 416.

(3) Counsel fee awarded by appellate division for services rendered on direct appeal to appellate division in board has been held not to extend to a determination of the reasonableness of the fee to be paid for services rendered in independent proceedings⁶⁹ even though such fee is made payable out of the award workmen's compensation proceeding arising out of accident which happened outside state did not include any allowance to workman's attorney as fee based on amount of increased award ordered by appellate division.

N.J.—Monaco v. Albert Maund, Inc., 91 A.2d 339, 21 N.J.Super. 448.

Effect of appeal

If workmen's compensation award is increased on appeal to appellate division, division of workmen's compensation is authorized to increase original award of attorney's fees based on amount of workman's award, as finally determined, as long as fee is kept within statutory maximum.

N.J.—Monaco v. Albert Maund, Inc., supra.

Offer of settlement or payment before hearing

(1) Nineteen hundred fifty-two Compensation Law amendment changed law so that to reduce attorney's fee, compensation had to be offered and amount then due tendered in good faith or paid at a reasonable time, prior to any hearing; and its purpose was to afford greater protection to attorneys representing compensation claimants who may have invested substantial time and effort prior to making of an offer by a respondent and "tender in good faith" suggests some degree of objectivity in making of a proposal.

N.J.—Moore v. Magor Car Corp., 136 A.2d 81, 47 N.J.Super. 425—Seitz v. Singer Mfg. Co., 116 A.2d 641, 36 N.J.Super. 546.

(2) Obvious purpose of provision is to encourage employers and compensation carriers to make voluntary payments at reasonable time prior to trial.

N.J.—Shuler v. Eastern Foundry, 111 A.2d 802, 34 N.J.Super. 216.

(3) Under statute providing that where at any reasonable time prior to "any hearing," compensation has been offered, and amount then due is tendered in good faith, reasonable allowance for attorney's fees shall be based only on part of award in excess of amount of compensation previously received, phrase "any hearing" means any final hearing and does not refer to any preliminary or indeterminate meeting or pre-trial conference of the parties; and phrase "reasonable time" is to be reviewed in light of clearly established facts, and is a circumstantial and latitudinous concept.

N.J.—Tlusek v. Federal Leather Co., 128 A.2d 521, 43 N.J.Super. 269.

(4) Under compensation amendment requiring in order to reduce attorney's fee that compensation be offered and amount then due tendered in good faith or paid at a reasonable time prior to any hearing, date of filing of claim petition may not of itself be selected as beginning date of test period of "reasonable time."

N.J.—Moore v. Magor Car Corp., supra.

(5) Under provision, overture must be reasonable as to time, and tender must be in good faith.

N.J.—Davala v. American Bridge Co., 115 A.2d 581, 36 N.J.Super. 274.

(6) "Tender" may have varying shades of contextual significance, but, as used within statute should be interpreted as requiring some degree of objectivity in making of proposal, so as not to deprive attorney of compensation.

N.J.—Davala v. American Bridge Co., supra.

(7) Where employer had been making death benefit payments to one of employee's alleged widows until other alleged widow made claim against employer, and employer then sought a judicial determination as to which of claimants it was liable, employer had not made bona fide offer or tender and was properly taxed with its share of attorneys' fees allowed widows' counsel.

N.J.—Shuler v. Eastern Foundry, supra.

(8) Settlement offer made by handing injured employee check for first week's permanent disability payment four days prior to hearing was not made within reasonable time prior to hearing and did not preclude award of reasonable attorney fees rather than fee based only on excess of award over settlement offer.

N.J.—Seitz v. Singer Mfg. Co., 111 A.2d 523, 34 N.J.Super. 88, affirmed 116 A.2d 641, 36 N.J.Super. 546.

(9) Offer and tender of settlement of workmen's compensation claim made by check rather than cash would have been sufficient for purposes of diminishing award of attorney's fees under statute.

N.J.—Seitz v. Singer Mfg. Co., 116 A.2d 641, 36 N.J.Super. 546.

(10) Offer of settlement in compensation case after case had opened for trial was too late.

(11) Offer of settlement in compensation case, made after case had been marked ready and contested on list, was made too late.

N.J.—Everhart v. Newark Cleaning & Dyeing Co., 184 A. 200, 14 N.J. Misc. 270, modified on other grounds Everhardt v. Newark Cleaning & Dyeing Co., 189 A. 926, 117 N.J.Law 581, reversed on other grounds 194 A. 294, 119 N.J.Law 108, conformed to 200 A. 759, 120 N.J.Law 474.

(12) Where claimant's attorney on day that case was marked ready received notice that employer acknowledged liability and on that day attorney and claimant were not present and ready to proceed, attorney, under statute as it then existed, was not entitled to counsel fees out of compensation which was subsequently allowed after hearing which was only pro forma, notwithstanding offer may have been made by way of amendment.

N.J.—Hope v. R. Hoe & Co., 98 A.2d 140, 26 N.J.Super. 602.

(13) Where employer first filed answer to claim petition for compensation for employee's death denying liability, but prior to any hearing filed amended answer admitting liability and offering to pay full amount of compensation, employer's offer of settlement defeated right of claimant's attorney to any award of counsel fees, despite his rendition of services in preparation of case for hearing.

N.J.—Haberberger v. Myer, 71 A.2d 717, 4 N.J. 116.

(14) Under provision of workmen's compensation act that counsel fee allowed in workmen's compensation bureau shall not exceed twenty per cent of that part of judgment or award in excess of amount of compensation offered or paid prior to hearing, allowance in bureau of one hundred fifty dollars counsel fee was required to be revised where employee was found to be entitled to additional award for permanent incapacity in the aggregate sum of six hundred sixty-six dollars and fifty cents.

N.J.—Di Meglio v. Slonk Const. Co., 2 A.2d 470, 121 N.J.Law 366, affirmed 5 A.2d 691, 122 N.J.Law 379.

of compensation made to applicant by the commission.⁷⁰

In jurisdictions which, under the compensation act, require the approval of attorney's fees by the commission, the jurisdiction of such commission as to the approval of attorney's fees is limited to attorney's fees which are required to be paid from, or sought to be enforced against, the proceeds of an award made to an injured workman.⁷¹ Where the payment thereof is not required to be made from the proceeds of the award, the commission has no jurisdiction over the amount of attorney's fees which a claimant has contracted to pay to an attorney,⁷² but when an attorney attempts to enforce the collection of an attorney's fee from the proceeds of an award made by the commission to an injured workman, the commission has jurisdiction to determine the reasonableness of the claim for an attorney's fee.⁷³

In fixing the amount of the fees of attorneys appearing and conducting proceedings for compensation, the court or commission is not given a purely uncontrolled and arbitrary power to determine what shall be allowed the attorney,⁷⁴ but it is given a

Test of reasonableness

Industrial commission is not arbitrary or unreasonable in fixing attorney's fee in compensation proceeding unless it fixes fee which a reasonable mind, familiar with value of attorney's services, would say was less than reasonable.

large discretion to incorporate in the award a provision for the benefit of counsel, and to determine what that provision shall be.⁷⁵ In fixing the amount of their fees for appearing and conducting litigation before the commission, attorneys should be accorded the same fair consideration as they usually receive before any other tribunal considering the amount of legal work done and the amount of money involved.⁷⁶ If the attorney has made a contract for his services, the board or commission must give him a fair hearing on the question of the reasonableness of the fee agreed to be paid before it can order a change therein.⁷⁷

Reduction of amount awarded by referee

(1) Fact that board reversed referee's award of compensation for employee's death as to one of claimants thereof at same time that it reduced amount of fee allowed by referee to claimants' attorney did not, of itself, establish that such fee was based solely on amount of award in violation of board's rule.⁷⁸

N.Y.—Hunter v. Goodstein Bros., 156 N.Y.S.2d 699, 2 A.D.2d 387.

(2) Fixing of claimant's attorney's fees, in compensation proceeding, was matter within discretion of compensation board whose finding would not be disturbed by appellate division, even though board had substantially reduced amount allowed by referee, where record disclosed no unusual or particularly novel problems which would justify finding that board had abused discretion.

N.Y.—Lipiarz v. International Mill Co., 139 N.Y.S.2d 399, 285 App.Div. 1092.

Setting aside award

Federal district court could set aside deputy commissioner's order fixing attorneys' fee for services rendered claimant under Longshoremen's and Harbor Workers' Compensation Act, only if order was "not in accordance with law."

Standard of measurement

Fees of attorneys rendering services in cases before industrial commission are not measured by same standard as in legal proceedings before courts or bodies other than those administering workmen's compensation acts.

Utah.—Ellis v. Industrial Commission, 64 P.2d 363, 91 Utah 432.

Reasonable worth of services

(1) Proper criterion in determining whether attorney fees awarded successful compensation claimant by county court were excessive was whether fees exceeded fair and reasonable worth of services performed by counsel.

N.J.—Neylon v. Ford Motor Co., 99 A.2d 664, 27 N.J.Super. 511.

(2) Although attorneys may not hope to be compensated to full measure of value of their time and work in a compensation proceeding, they must not be limited by industrial commission to such meagerly fees that they cannot afford to accept compensation cases.

Utah.—Thatcher v. Industrial Commission, 207 P.2d 178, 115 Utah 568.

(3) Attorneys' fees in workmen compensation cases should not be fixed with sole purpose in view of saving applicant from expense and should not be so low as to discourage competent attorneys from accepting employment in industrial accident matters.

Appraisal of value of service

Attorneys appearing in compensation cases may not contract for fees in excess of those awarded by commission, but they are entitled to have commission carefully appraise value of services shown to have been rendered in fixing fee; and attorney is not to be regarded as consenting to fixing of a minimum fee by his failure to offer evidence as to value of his services particularly where record before referee and industrial accident commission shows on its face that services of attorney involved considerable responsibility and that they were of substantial value. Cal.—Bentley v. Industrial Acc. Commission, 171 P.2d 532, 75 C.A.2d 547.

Increase over agreed amount

(1) Industrial commission in compensation proceeding cannot fix attorney's fee above amount which attorney and client have agreed to. Utah.—Thatcher v. Industrial Commission, 207 P.2d 178, 115 Utah 568.

(2) An attorney's fee of seventy-five dollars allowed to claimant's attorney in workmen's compensation proceeding was increased to only one hundred dollars in view of limitation of value placed upon services of attorney, although without such limit-

In determining the amount of the fee to be awarded, various matters have been considered,⁷⁸ such as the number of witnesses sworn,⁷⁹ the length of time taken,⁸⁰ and the nature of the case, whether it was a troublesome, complicated issue or a simple matter easily and quickly determined.⁸¹ Under some statutes the amount may be based not only on the cash award to the employee but also on the amount expended by defendant for medical, surgical, and hospital services, since such services are part of the compensation.⁸²

The fee may not include a portion of the expenses of the litigation to be paid therefrom.⁸³ The duty placed on an insurer under some compensation acts to pay for legal services in connection with the appointment of a legal representative of a deceased employee not otherwise necessary is limited to necessary disbursements for appointment, the representative's necessary expenses, and compensation for time necessarily spent in carrying out a provision that, if payment is made to him, it shall be paid to the dependents.⁸⁴

A compensation act which provides that all fees of attorneys under the act shall be subject to the approval of the board, and that no fee shall be allowed exceeding the sums specified in the section, and also that the board may deny or reduce the fees if it appears that the employment was solicited, was intended, it has been held, to limit the fees that attorneys might have,⁸⁵ to give to the board the tation, evidence would support a higher fee.

Colo.—Cline v. Warrenberg, 126 P.2d 1030, 109 Colo. 497.

Amendment of statute

Where a section of compensation act provided for a hearing relative to attorney fees in accordance with terms of another section, which section was amended so that it no longer applied to such hearings, court was entitled to resort to other pertinent parts of act and to applicable rules of compensation commission. Mich.—Wing v. Aten, 25 N.W.2d 561, 316 Mich. 365.

Schedule of services and fees

(1) If deputy commissioner is otherwise unable to agree with attorneys and claimant for amount to be allowed as attorneys' fees in proceeding under Longshoremen's and Harbor Workers' Compensation Act, he has right to ask for written statement or schedule of services and fees, although such statement is otherwise not customarily required. Where attorneys refused to submit requested statement or schedule of services and fees for services rendered for use of Deputy Commissioner in fixing attorneys' fees, and record before federal district court in proceeding to review order fixing such fees was meager, court could not say that deputy commissioner's order was contrary to law or that he had abused his discretion.

U.S.—Hillman v. O'Hearne, D.C.Md., 129 F.Supp. 217.

(2) Schedules of attorneys' fees for workmen's compensation cases as approved by board of governors of state bar are of material assistance to courts in passing on fees to be allowed in such cases.

Or.—Cox v. State Industrial Accident Commission, 123 P.2d 800, 168 Or. 508, 159 A.L.R. 899.

Nature of injury and amount of compensation as fixed by statute should be considered in determining reasonableness of attorneys' fee in compensation case.

Or.—Cox v. State Industrial Accident Commission, supra.

Attorney's opinion

Industrial commission was not bound to accept attorneys' opinion evidence to exclusion of other evidence in fixing amount of fee allowed attorney for employee awarded compensation for injuries sustained. Utah.—Ellis v. Industrial Commission, 64 P.2d 363, 91 Utah 432.

Employee's station

Attorney's fee for services rendered to injured employee in workmen's compensation proceeding should be measured according to such employee's station.

Utah.—Ellis v. Industrial Commission, supra.

Purpose of statute

In determining reasonableness of attorneys' fee in compensation case, court should consider purpose of workmen's compensation law, and fact that attorneys' fees were made subject to supervision by commission and courts in furtherance of that purpose.

Or.—Cox v. State Industrial Accident Commission, 123 P.2d 800, 168 Or. 508, 159 A.L.R. 899.

Subsequent recovery of additional compensation

Where after successful termination of workmen's compensation case, attorney applied to have fees fixed and justice of superior court found that attorney was entitled to a total fee of one third of accumulated compensation recovered in "pending case" and such fee was paid, attorney was not entitled to a fee of one third of lump sum settlement of future compensation subsequently procured through services of another attorney.

power to reduce the fee below the statutory limit,⁸⁶ even when it was agreed to by contract,⁸⁷ and to deny altogether the fee if it should appear the employment was solicited.⁸⁸ Under such a statute the board in the exercise of a sound discretion and after a careful consideration and understanding of the facts and circumstances may reduce the contract compensation agreed to be paid an attorney, although it does not exceed the statutory amount or there be any evidence that the employment was solicited,⁸⁹ and, if no contract was entered into between the attorney and the client, it has the power to fix the fee at a reasonable sum.⁹⁰

A contract between the injured employee or his dependents and the attorney as to the amount of the fee for services under the workmen's compensation act has, under some circumstances, been held to be of no force or effect.⁹¹ The acceptance by an attorney of a portion of his fee and the receipt for it as for his fee in full waives any right he may have had to a larger sum.⁹²

Effect of settlement. Where an attorney has,

by reason of the judgment or award, become entitled to a certain sum as his fee, such amount may not be reduced by a subsequent settlement by claimant and the employer or his insurer for an amount less than the judgment.⁹³

Acquisition of jurisdiction by commission. To invoke the jurisdiction of the commission to determine the amount of attorney's fees it is not necessary to file with it a claim for attorney's fees;⁹⁴ a verbal complaint by claimant to the commission is sufficient to invoke its jurisdiction.⁹⁵

Return of excess fee. In some jurisdictions the compensation commission or board or the court has power to compel an attorney to repay any fee in excess of the amount fixed as proper,⁹⁶ although not where the fee was received for services other than in the compensation case.⁹⁷ In other jurisdictions such power does not exist.⁹⁸

Remedy of attorney who feels himself aggrieved by the action of the board in allowing a smaller fee than he considers himself entitled to have is by appeal from the action of the board to the court;⁹⁹

Where employment not solicited

Under section governing allowance of attorney's fee, injured employee's attorney who had not solicited employment was entitled to reasonable compensation for time and effort expended by attorney in employee's behalf, notwithstanding attorney's failure to recover for employee an award greater than employee would have recovered without an attorney, or to recover fifteen per cent additional compensation for employer's failure to install or maintain safety appliances.

Limitation on right to appeal

Statute providing that orders of industrial accident commission regulating payments and refunds for legal services in compensation cases may be appealed from in similar manner as awards for compensation is limited to appeal as to right to fee and its size, and to obligation to refund.

Md.—Switkes v. John McShain, Inc., 96 A.2d 617, 202 Md. 340.

Agreed judgment

Where, in workmen's compensation action, there was entered an agreed judgment which was for six thousand dollars and which awarded plaintiff's attorneys fee of one thousand dollars, instead of two thousand dollars as agreed to between plaintiff and attorneys, attorneys were not entitled to appeal from such judgment for purpose of having their fees increased to two thousand dollars in view of fact that benefits of such agreed judgment had been accepted.

U.S.—White & Yarbrough v. Dallas, C.A. Tex., 228 F.2d 836.

but under some statutes no right to appeal exists from a decision fixing attorney's fees,¹ or from an order denying a petition for review of such a decision.² Under other provisions an attorney is entitled to maintain an independent proceeding in the supreme court to obtain a review of an award fixing attorney's fees.³

On appeal. What constitutes a reasonable fee for the attorney's services on appeal must be determined by the facts of the case in which allowed,⁴ and its amount is a matter, in large degree, of discretion vested in the trial court.⁵ An award which is not briefed or argued will not be considered on appeal.⁶ It has been held that the commission's powers as to attorney's fees are law questions which may be considered on review only if passed on by the commission and included in the record before the appellate court.⁷

§ 821. — Payment; Commutation

Payment of attorney's fees, whether in installments or by commutation to a lump sum, is generally regulated by provisions of the statute.

On approval of a claim for legal services, the manner of payment has been held a matter for the discretion of the board or court.⁸ Attorney's fees may be made payable in installments,⁹ and under some compensation acts, an award of compensation cannot direct the immediate payment in a lump sum of the fee of claimant's attorney to be credited as compensation where the award is made payable in installments;¹⁰ but, on a bulk sum settlement or commutation, payment of the attorney's fees can be ordered to be made in full,¹¹ or, where the payments are made periodically, they may be applied in whole or in part to such fees until extinguished.¹² In other jurisdictions, under a compensation act which authorizes the compensation commission to allow claims for legal services, and also to commute periodical payments to a lump sum, such commission may commute a portion of the periodical payments into a lump sum and order immediate payment of that sum as an attorney's fee for claimant's attorney,¹³ but not in cases excluded from commuta-

Effect of order for lump-sum payment

Where compensation award directed payment of a portion thereof to attorney for claimant and award was affirmed by supreme court, and a subsequent order was entered directing lump sum payment to claimant of amount due under original award, fact that employer and insurer, by inadvertence, included in lump sum payment to claimant amount they were required to pay attorney, did not excuse them from paying attorney.

Okl.—O. C. Whitaker, Inc., v. Dillingham, 152 P.2d 371, 194 Okl. 421.

In proceeding for a lump sum compensation award, requiring employee's attorney's fee to be paid out of weekly compensation payments was error.

In Oregon

(1) Industrial accident commission could raise question of lack of authority of circuit court to award an attorney's fee in a lump sum constituting percentage of additional amount of compensation awarded to claimant as a result of appeal to circuit court since commission had a direct interest in matter.

Or.—Verban v. State Industrial Accident Commission, 123 P.2d 988, 168 Or. 394.

(2) Where accrued payments of compensation were more than sufficient to discharge attorney's fee in full, and reasonableness of fee was not challenged, circuit court in exercise of sound discretion was justified on application of claimant and his attorney in directing payment to attorney in a lump sum.

Or.—Verban v. State Industrial Accident Commission, 123 P.2d 988, 168 Or. 394—Cox v. State Industrial Accident Commission, 121 P.2d 919, 168 Or. 508, 159 A.L.R. 899.

tion.¹⁴ The commutation must be made under, and in accordance with, statutory provisions applicable thereto.¹⁵ Under some statutes the lump sum allowance is based on a percentage of the total amount of the award of compensation.¹⁶ A lump sum payment may be made to cover fees of attor-

(3) Court cannot make such award when there is not sufficient accrued compensation to pay fee, since such action amounts in effect to payment of portion of compensation in a lump sum within statute authorizing commission only to make such payments. Or.—Verban v. State Industrial Accident Commission, supra.

(4) Discretion of trial court in awarding attorney's fee in compensation cases is limited to determination of extent of attorney's fee and manner in which it shall be paid out of additional compensation secured by attorney's efforts, and if sufficient compensation has accrued at time of judgment, court may order payment of fees therefrom, but in other cases attorney's fees to extent fixed by court becomes a lien on extra compensation secured and is payable therefrom in reasonable manner to be fixed by court.

Or.—Verban v. State Industrial Accident Commission, supra.

(5) Supreme court was not without jurisdiction to interfere with award of circuit court of an attorney's fee in a lump sum on ground that compensation claimant and attorneys agreed on payment of entire fee, in view of statute providing that no claim for legal services in connection with circuit court litigation should be valid unless approved by court.

Or.—Verban v. State Industrial Accident Commission, supra.

(6) Where through attorneys' efforts on appeal to circuit court from industrial accident commission award was increased, circuit court could not award an attorney's fee in a lump sum notwithstanding claimant and attorneys agreed on present payment of entire fee, but such fee was required to be paid in monthly installments when additional compensation was paid to claimant and such fee was to be a lien on such additional compensation.

Or.—Verban v. State Industrial Accident Commission, supra.

(7) In entering judgment for claimant on appeal from industrial accident commission's order denying compensation for employee's death, court was authorized to fix fee of claimant's attorneys in amount agreed on between them and claimant, but had no authority to direct payment of such amount in lump sum, in absence of provision for like payment of compensation awarded. Or.—Dickson v. State Industrial Accident Commission, 107 P.2d 104, 165 Or. 306.

(8) Under earlier statutes an order directing fees of attorney for compensation claimant injured on July 5, 1934, to be paid in single cash payment was held authorized.

Award payable from special indemnity fund

(1) In workmen's compensation case, attorney's fees may be allowed and may be made payable from special indemnity fund but attorney's fees must be paid in periodical installments same as payment of compensation to claimant although fee may be paid from latter part of award.

Okl.—Special Indem. Fund v. Hobbs, 164 P.2d 980, 196 Okl. 318.

(2) In making an award against special indemnity fund, state industrial commission was authorized to order lump sum equivalent of eleven payments of twenty-five dollars per week payable in weekly installments from latter end of award as attorneys' fees in addition to periodical payments to be made to claimant.

Okl.—Special Indem. Fund v. Bryant, 239 P.2d 1014, 205 Okl. 630.

(3) Attorneys' fees awarded to claimant's attorneys and ordered paid from special indemnity fund in weekly installments of twenty-five dollars constituted compensation payments, and hence, in making award against special indemnity fund of twenty-five dollars per week to claimant, state industrial commission had no authority to order that payment of attorneys' fee commence immediately, since such payments together with compensation payments to claimant would exceed maximum compensation payments of twenty-five dollars per week allowed by statute.

Okl.—Special Indem. Fund v. Bryant, supra.

15. Miss.—American Sur. Co. of N. Y. v. Boykin, 54 So.2d 398, 212 Miss. 310.

16. Possible change of condition.
(1) Where attorney for claimant, who had been awarded compensation for permanent partial disability, was allowed fee equal to twenty-five per cent of total amount of compensation, such lump sum allowance for attorney's fee was properly based on assumption that disability would continue for full four hundred and fifty week period, even though it might subsequently develop that disability would not continue beyond twenty-five weeks.

Miss.—Jim Nix Cafeteria v. Burton, 84 So.2d 164, 226 Miss. 206.

(2) Decision of commission requiring attorney's fee to be paid to deceased employee's dependent out of last payments to become due was not objectionable on ground that carrier might be compelled to meet payments for entire period even though dependent died before expiration of period during which dependent was entitled to compensation, in view of workmen's compensation law providing that probability of death of person entitled to compensation before expiration of period shall be determined in accordance with American experience table of mortality.

Miss.—American Sur. Co. of N. Y. v. Boykin, 54 So.2d 398, 212 Miss. 310.

(3) Where deceased employee's widow was given an award of compensation for 365.2 weeks, with provision in award that compensable period should terminate on widow's death or remarriage, and widow's attorney was awarded a commuted attorney's fee in a lump sum, and thereafter widow died before compensable period had expired, and on appeal court of appeals affirmed the award, award became conclusive and industrial commission had no discretion to modify award by reducing amount of attorney's fee.

Mo.—Dunaway v. J. C. Penney Co., 209 S.W.2d 567, 240 Mo.App. 61.

(4) In absence of any restriction in statute on commission's power to commute future installments of compensation so as to permit immediate payment of attorney's fees, fact that obligation for payment of future compensation was contingent because of possibility of death or remarriage of claimant to whom award was made, and of absence of any other dependents, did not preclude attorneys from having portion of award to which they were entitled under contract with claimant commuted and paid in a lump sum.

Mo.—Wims v. Hercules Contracting Co., 123 S.W.2d 225, 235 Mo.App. 225.

(5) Where widow was awarded fixed weekly sum for three months

neys in the amount agreed on by contract between claimant and his attorneys where the agreed amount is fair, just, and reasonable.¹⁷

Attorney's fees are, under some provisions, to be paid out of the amount awarded as compensation.¹⁸ Only after the amount of the fee has been fixed by the commission may the fee be deducted from the award and paid directly to the attorney.¹⁹ It has been held that the award of attorney's fees should be to claimant and not to the attorney.²⁰

Where interest is allowed an offer of payment of the fee without interest is not sufficient.²¹ An error in the award proper has been held not to extend to, or affect the portion of, the award covering payment of attorney's fees.²² A claim for legal services, based on a contract, is not enforceable in an independent action where the statute provides that such a claim shall be unenforceable in the courts unless approved by the commission.²³

Discount. In making a lump sum award of a fee to the attorney, it has been held that a discount should be allowed.²⁴ The discount is not chargeable to either the employer or insurer.²⁵ weeks and twenty-six weekly payments were due and unpaid, industrial board could order payment of widow's attorney's fees in a lump sum equal to twenty-five per cent of total compensation reduced to its commutable value with such payment to be credited against last installment payments to widow at end of compensation period with interest at five per cent on all compensation not yet payable under terms of award, notwithstanding weekly payments to widow would cease on her remarriage or death.

The provision of the workmen's compensation act that no agreement for legal services shall be an enforceable lien against amounts to be paid as compensation or valid and binding in any other respect, unless approved by a judge of the trial court, does not fix an arbitrary charge, but leaves the amount to be determined and fixed by the judge, and it will not be presumed that the judge will refuse to make a reason-

§ 822. — Lien

When so provided for by statute, and only in such case, a claim for attorney's fees may become a lien on the award of compensation.

Some compensation acts contain provisions prohibiting the assignment of claims for compensation under the workmen's compensation act and exempting them from claims of creditors and from levy, execution, attachment, or other remedy for the collection thereof. In such case the employee cannot assign to his attorney an interest in the cause of action.²⁶ The fund arising from an allowance by the industrial commission under the workmen's compensation law is exempt from the common-law lien of an attorney on a fund produced by his services,²⁷ nor does the fact that the payment agreed on by the employer was not approved by the compensation board or commission enable the lien to attach.²⁸ However, such acts frequently contain additional provisions which authorize an attorney's lien against the fund paid as compensation provided the attorney's fee is approved by the court or compensation board or commission. In such case claims for attorney's fees must be approved by the court or commission before they become a lien on the compensation awarded.²⁹

Approval condition precedent

The provision of the compensation act that no claim or agreement for legal services or disbursements in support of any demand made or suit brought under the act shall be an enforceable lien against amounts to be paid as compensation or be valid or binding in any respect, unless approved in writing by the presiding judge, or, in case of settlement without trial, by a judge of the district court, constitutes a condition precedent created by the state in the exercise of its police power to safeguard interests of a class for whose benefit the compensation act was enacted. Neb.—Solomon v. A. W. Farney, Inc., 286 N.W. 254, 136 Neb. 338.

A claim for attorney's fees cannot become a lien on the award, or be collected out of it except in the amount approved by the commission,³⁰ and until the claim for attorney's fees is so approved the attorney is without authority of law to hold the proceeds of the award without the consent of claimant.³¹ If, however, the fee of the attorney is approved by the commission, it is a lien on the proceeds of the award, and may be collected by the attorney from the proceeds thereof.³² It has been held that a statutory provision requiring that the fee of an attorney be reasonable and be approved by the court indicates an intention that the fee may be secured out of the amount collected as compensation.³³ A lien for attorney's fees which the commission may impress on an award of compensation is wholly incidental to the principal award.³⁴

Under a compensation act which requires as a condition of the attachment of an attorney's lien to the compensation of the workmen that the contract for professional services be in writing and be approved by the court or judge, it is not essential that the attorney's written contract for fees be approved before the lien may attach.³⁵ This approval, however, it has been held, is not a time condition.³⁶ The attorney's lien perfected prior to settlement under a written contract approved subsequent to settlement will extend to his contract percentage of the sum paid the workman,³⁷ and it will not, where the settlement was not collusive or fraudulent as to the attorney, extend to the contract percentage of the sum the workman would have received if, instead of settling, he had prosecuted the compensation proceeding to a decision.³⁸ A lien given by statute may not be displaced by the board and precedence given to some other claim.³⁹ Unless otherwise provided by statute it has been held that fees of the attorney may not be made liens on payments made to a special fund.⁴⁰

The method of perfecting a lien has been held to be that prescribed by the general statute,⁴¹ and when perfected the lien will attach for whatever amount the court finally approves.⁴² The disapproval by the court of the amount of the fee provided in a contract for professional services is not a disapproval and setting aside of the contract so as to pre-

In action by attorney to recover amount of attorney's lien against employer's insurer, declaration which did not contain allegation that attorney had obtained any approval by superior court of his contingent fee for services as required by Workmen's Compensation Act was defective on demurrer.

vent a compliance with the requirement that the contract as to the fee be in writing as a condition to a lien therefor, but is merely a modification of the amount of the fee and an approval of the contract with such modification.⁴³ In some jurisdictions an attorney's lien on compensation awarded under the compensation act exists, if at all, only because of the general statute on the subject of attorneys' liens.⁴⁴

The compensation board has been held without jurisdiction to enforce an attorney's lien.⁴⁵

Lien of lay representative. Under a compensation act which provides that a party litigant before the commission may be represented to one not admitted to practice law and authorizes the commission to fix and determine and allow as a lien against the award a reasonable attorney's fee for legal services, it is proper for the commission to declare the amount directed to be paid a lay representative of claimant for his services a lien on the compensation awarded.⁴⁶

Notice of lien. Where a lien is allowed, in the absence of a statute providing otherwise, it need not be recorded,⁴⁷ and the only notice necessary is that the employer and his insurance carrier have notice of the attorney's relation to the proceeding.⁴⁸ After service of notice of lien, the employer must, at his peril, take into account the attorney's contract when settling with the injured workman and in paying awards and judgments.⁴⁹

§ 823. Costs

- a. In general
- b. Fees of expert witnesses

a. In General

Costs and witness fees are allowable in workmen's compensation proceedings only when and to the extent authorized by statute.

Costs and witness fees are not to be allowed in workmen's compensation proceedings in the absence of a positive or permissive statute.⁵⁰ However, the acts ordinarily make specific provisions as to the propriety of allowing costs,⁵¹ which may be allowed only under the terms and conditions of the statute.⁵² Under some compensation acts court

General statute not applicable

(1) Under statute providing for costs to prevailing party in all civil actions, successful employee was not entitled to costs of proceedings under workmen's compensation act, since statute does not apply to such proceedings.

Mass.—Minns' Case, 190 N.E. 843, 286 Mass. 459—Royal's Case, 190 N.E. 841, 286 Mass. 374.

(2) The statute expressly limited to costs arising out of court actions did not authorize allowance by industrial commission of traveling expenses to compensation claimant, since the statute has no application to special proceedings before any boards, bureaus or commissions, unless expressly authorized by statute. Colo.—Maryland Cas. Co. v. Industrial Commission, 178 P.2d 426, 116 Colo. 58.

Provisions as to attorneys' fees

Provisions of workmen's compensation act as to fees of attorneys representing claimants before industrial accident board and contracts for attorneys' fees for representing claimants in courts are inapplicable to fees of guardians ad litem for minor claimants and costs.

Award to employee, not counsel

Decree awarding costs in proceeding by which compensation insurer sought enforcement of memorandum of agreement with employee should have awarded costs to the employee and not to his counsel.

Mass.—Green's Case, 111 N.E.2d 203, 380 Mass. 63.

"Either party"

The provision of the workmen's compensation act that witness' fees, expenses, and costs of any hearing may be imposed by the workmen's compensation board upon either party or may be divided between parties in such proportion as the board may direct, in using the expression "either party" manifestly designates the claimant or the employer or his insurance carrier, and does not include the commonwealth.

Pa.—Weyant v. General Refractories Co., 29 A.2d 100, 150 Pa.Super. 502.

Restriction on amount

Offer of settlement in compensation case after case had opened for trial was too late to entitle employer to restriction upon costs and attorney's fees authorized by statute, where compensation had been offered prior to rehearing.

Costs against state

In suit against state of Louisiana, through state board of education, department of public education, as specially authorized by legislature, for workmen's compensation, only court costs taxable against state were stenographer's costs of taking testimony.

La.—Gillmore v. State, App., 79 So.2d 192.

costs ordinarily follow the judgment in a workmen's compensation case,⁵³ and the successful party to the proceeding recovers of his adversary the costs incurred,⁵⁴ but the prevailing party has been held not entitled to costs as a matter of right.⁵⁵

Under other compensation acts each party may be required to pay his own costs,⁵⁶ as where both parties prevail in part;⁵⁷ and under still other acts costs can be awarded only in a case where the employer does not institute proceedings for review of the decision of the board and refuses to pay the compensation awarded.⁵⁸

necessary costs caused by the opposing party.⁵⁹ However, the necessary expenses incurred by insurer in successfully defending a common-law action wrongfully brought by the employee against the employer to recover for the injuries suffered cannot be credited by the compensation board on the amount awarded the employee as compensation under the act.⁶⁰ Statutes authorizing the court before which a workmen's compensation proceeding is brought, prosecuted, or defended without reasonable ground to assess the whole cost against the offending party do not supersede general provisions for the taxation of costs.⁶¹

Costs against city as employer

The taxing of all costs of suit against city in its capacity as an employer in a compensation case was error in light of statute restricting costs taxable against state or any municipality or political subdivision to the costs of court reporter for taking the testimony.

71 C.J. p 1406 note 58.

Necessity of judgment

In workman's compensation case, there must be a money judgment for claimant in workmen's compensation bureau to justify its allowance of counsel fee and costs to claimant, and dismissal of employer's rule to open judgment for claimant is not a "judgment," but an "order," which does not justify such allowance.

N.J.—Yeager v. Brown Bros., 37 A.2d 287, 131 N.J.Law 463, affirmed 40 A.2d 571, 132 N.J.Law 361.

Reduction of award

The reduction of an award of compensation for death of plaintiffs' son from $11.99 per week to $11.98 was so small that under rule of "de minimis non curat lex" it would have no effect on payment of costs.

(2) Defendant in suit under compensation act which is brought in forma pauperis has right to show at any time during progress of litigation between it and plaintiff that plaintiff is able to pay costs or give bond therefor, but until such showing is made plaintiff has right to prosecute his suit under original order permitting him to file and prosecute suit in forma pauperis.

Employee not entitled to costs

Under statute providing that whole cost shall be assessed against party who brought or defended proceedings under workmen's compensation act without reasonable ground, successful employee was not entitled to costs of such proceedings defended by insurer on close questions relating to aggravation of pre-existing latent disease causing total disability of employee, and admission of expert opinion testimony.

If the equities require it, the costs may be divided between the parties;⁶² and where, in an action for compensation, the right thereto is admitted, except for the bar of the statutory limitation, the costs are, under some compensation acts, properly adjudged against the successful employer.⁶³ Where the compensation act provides for the payment of fees in the first instance by the employer who may deduct one half of such payment from any compensation found due the employee, such fees are properly taxed in full against the employer instead of being apportioned one half to each party.⁶⁴ Where a minor claimant is brought in at the suggestion of defendant, the court may allow fees to the guardian ad litem appointed to represent him within the limitation fixed for attorney's fees.⁶⁵ The state insurance fund is liable for costs in a proceeding for compensation the same as any private insurance company.⁶⁶

In suit to determine proper beneficiaries the cost of litigation should be charged against the beneficiaries where the compensation insurer at all times conceded liability to such persons as the court should determine were the proper beneficiaries.⁶⁷

b. Fees of Expert Witnesses

The various compensation acts generally make provision for the taxing as costs of the fees of expert witnesses.

Under some compensation acts the fees of expert witnesses are taxed as a part of the costs of suit,⁶⁸ the amount thereof being left to the discretion of the court.⁶⁹ The fees of each expert witness should be fixed, instead of providing a total fee for all expert witnesses testifying.⁷⁰ The fact that most of the testimony of the expert was ruled out on objections does not mitigate against his right to a fee as an expert.⁷¹ In a proper case the fees of expert witnesses may be apportioned.⁷²

A statute authorizing the payment of the fees of medical and other witnesses on appeal from an order of the board does not authorize the payment as costs of fees of expert medical witnesses beyond the ordinary fees authorized by statute for witnesses generally.⁷³ Fees for expert witnesses will not be allowed where it does not appear that it was necessary to call them.⁷⁴ A physician testifying to facts which were within his own personal knowledge as claimant's attending physician is not entitled to a fee as an expert witness.⁷⁵

Under a compensation act which provides that the fees of expert witnesses shall be reasonable and are not to be allowed unless fixed in the judgment, the proper time to tax as costs such fees is while the case is being tried on its merits and not after final judgment.⁷⁶ It is too late, after the case has been appealed, for the employer to object to a reasonable bill of costs to cover the fees of expert witnesses.⁷⁷ The status of doctors testifying as expert witnesses for the employee is not affected in so far as their right to fees as experts by the fact that the trial court did not appoint them, but instead they were summoned by the employee.⁷⁸ A provision in the compensation act that the fees of medical witnesses shall be reasonable and are not to be allowed unless fixed in the judgment relates to court procedure and applies to actions tried after its passage although the cause of action arose prior thereto.⁷⁹

An attorney representing the claimant has been held not entitled to recover from him a fee advanced to an expert witness testifying for the claimant without having submitted such claim to the employer or insurance carrier for payment.⁸⁰

§ 824. — On Appeal

Costs on appeal are taxable only when authorized by statute.

In a compensation case there is no authority on appeal to tax the costs against a party in the absence of some statutory provision conferring such authority,⁸¹ and a statute authorizing costs before the commission or board will not authorize such costs on appeal.⁸² However, some statutory provision is generally made therefor.⁸³ A provision authorizing costs only in a case where the employer

Effect of tender of compensation

An employee who was entitled to compensation under judgment of commission of appeals would be required to pay costs incurred in commission of appeals, where insurance carrier who sued out writ of error to commission of appeals, tendered the amount of compensation to which employee was entitled in the court of civil appeals and in the commission of appeals.

Where successful party substantially interested

Where compensation insurer was successful for the most part on its appeal but the insurer was substantially interested in the proper construction of the compensation statute rather than the employee, the insurer was required to pay the cost on appeal.

apportion the costs;⁸⁸ it may deny costs to either party on appeal,⁸⁹ particularly where both parties are successful in part;⁹⁰ where a judgment for defendant is reversed and remanded for retrial, the costs may be ordered to abide the event,⁹¹ or assessed against the employer and his insurer, where the award was made for a combination of injuries treated as a single injury, but remand is necessary to determine the extent of compensation for partial permanent loss of use of a member;⁹² or where an appeal by the employer and his insurer was not necessary to obtain correction of a judgment granting compensation, the costs of the appeal will be taxed against the employer and his insurer.⁹³

A statute providing that, if insurer appeals to a reviewing board from an award of compensation and the board by its decision orders insurer to make or to continue payments to the injured employee, the cost to the injured employee of such review shall be determined by the board and shall be paid by insurer, applies to appeals by insurer alone and has nothing to do with appeals by the employee.⁹⁴ It relates solely to the cost to the employee of the review.⁹⁵ In its largest extent it can comprehend only disbursements reasonably made and actually required,⁹⁶ and although the reviewing board does not constitute a court, but only an administrative tribunal, yet the word "cost," as used in such statute, bears a close analogy to the "costs" as used in ordinary proceedings in the courts,⁹⁷ and the statute affords something in the nature of court costs as reimbursement for actual expenses incurred by the employee and not as a penalty on insurer for seeking review of the decision awarding compensation to the employee.⁹⁸

in the event that it prosecutes its claim for review and the employee is allowed to recover some compensation even though reduced in amount as a result of the review.⁹⁹ Of course, if on appeal to the court by insurer it should be decided finally that the employee was not entitled to recover compensation, a determination of costs to be paid by insurer made by the reviewing board would fall.¹ In general it is obligatory on the reviewing board to act with reference to the costs if on review the employee is to receive any compensation.²

A compensation claimant who loses an appeal will not be taxed for unnecessary costs incurred in transmitting the record to the appellate court.³ A provision of the workmen's compensation law that, where the commission or a court determines that a proceeding under such law has not been brought on reasonable grounds, such court or commission shall assess the whole cost of the proceeding on the party who has so brought it is mandatory,⁴ and requires the court of appeals to award costs against the party to an appeal under the act whenever such court determines that the proceeding has not been brought on reasonable grounds.⁵ Such a statute, however, does not supersede all other provisions for the award of costs so as to prevent the taxation of ordinary costs in cases where there is no element of unreasonableness.⁶

In some jurisdictions, in the exercise of the court's discretion, costs will not be awarded against an unsuccessful claimant personally, but will be charged against the state industrial commission which virtually represents such claimant through the attorney general.⁷ On appeal an affidavit of inability to pay costs by a claimant of compensation need not include parties erroneously joined in the action.⁸

Objections on appeal to costs and expenses incurred in the prosecution of a claim for compensation may be too late.⁹

Liability of attorney. An attorney entitled to receive for his fee a percentage of the compensation awarded is not liable for any portion of the costs on an appeal from the award.¹⁰

Liability of intervener. An intervener who, on the trial, recovered against both parties is liable for the costs on appeal when the judgment is reversed.¹¹

Cost of transcript. Under some compensation acts transcripts in appeals must be furnished to the employer or employee without cost,¹² and under a statute prohibiting the taxation of costs in favor of either party on an appeal in a workmen's compensation case the expense of printing the testimony cannot be taxed against claimant on appeal.¹³ On an employer's appeal, where he has prepared and filed a transcript as required by statute, a successful claimant is not entitled to costs of the transcript.¹⁴ Where no transcript is made, but in lieu thereof the original record of the board is filed in the circuit court and transmitted with the record on appeal, the clerk of the circuit court is not entitled to a

Existence of reasonable ground

In compensation proceeding, where in claimant recovered judgment against state insurance fund for death of employee who shot and killed himself after his mind was affected by injuries suffered in course of his employment, counsel for state in interest of his client exercised sound professional judgment in prosecuting appeal, in view of novel question presented, and appellee could not have costs, including a reasonable attorney's fee and damages, taxed against appellant.

fee for transmitting the transcript, since none has been made.¹⁵

Printing costs may be allowed to the extent that they are reasonable.¹⁶

Damages or penalties on appeal. In jurisdictions authorizing the imposition of damages or a penalty on a party appealing or suing out a writ of error in case such appeal or writ of error is frivolous or sued out for the purpose of delay,¹⁷ such damages or penalty will not be assessed where the appeal was not frivolous or taken for delay,¹⁸ and damages cannot be allowed for frivolous appeal where defendant does not stay the execution of the judgment by giving a suspensive appeal bond.¹⁹ The appeal will not be considered frivolous where eminent physicians disagreed in their diagnosis as to the probable duration of the disability.²⁰

Any right to damages is governed wholly by the statute.²¹ Damages for delay will not be imposed where the employer and his insurer have, on appeal, succeeded in having the judgment awarding compensation corrected.²² Where there has been no definite or fixed sum awarded, damages and interest will not be allowed on affirmance.²³ Under a statute so providing, where the employer appeals from an award of the full board, the proper statutory penalty may be awarded on affirmance of the award.²⁴

Necessity of appeal. Where, on successful appeal from the order of the commission, claimant is entitled to costs, he cannot recover costs where by negotiation he secures a cancellation of an order of the board terminating his compensation and a reinstatement of his compensation.²⁵

§ 825. Expenses

Expenses in compensation proceedings are allowable only when and to the extent authorized by statute.

Except as authorized by statute, no allowance for expenses may be made in compensation cases.²⁶ The commission on awarding compensation may, in some jurisdictions, assess against the employer and his insurer the costs incurred by claimant in taking depositions.²⁷ However, it has been held that an attorney may not proceed to incur expenses in attending the taking of a deposition and later obtain an order for allowance of the expenses.²⁸ In jurisdictions in which the compensation act requires the judge of the district court to investigate claims for compensation in such manner as he may deem necessary the judge may have the aid of assistants who are entitled to receive, as expenses of investigation, compensation for their services.²⁹ The necessity of employing such assistants is largely in the discretion of the judge,³⁰ and the amount to be paid them should not exceed the reasonable value

XX. PAYMENT OF COMPENSATION AND ENFORCEMENT OF AWARD

A. PAYMENT

§ 826. In General

Compensation should be paid in the time and manner prescribed by the workmen's compensation act.

Compensation should be paid in the time and manner prescribed by the workmen's compensation act.³⁷ In the absence of controversy, compensation should be paid immediately,³⁸ without waiting for an award by the compensation board,³⁹ and where compensation has been paid an award should not be made for such period.⁴⁰ Under some statutes, payments must be made within a stated time after the injury or claim unless a notice denying liability for compensation is filed.⁴¹

Payments called for by a compensation award are immediately due and payable.⁴² Payments by the employer for drugs and medicines for the employee constitute payments of compensation within the statute.⁴³ A provision requiring the employee to give a receipt for the payment of compensation does not limit the employer to such a receipt to prove his payment of compensation.⁴⁴

Liability for injuries to state employees. A provision of the workmen's compensation act for the payment of compensation awards for injuries to state employees out of the state contingent fund is not impliedly repealed by a special act requiring the Self-insured city which did not contest compensation claim by its employee was under obligation to pay compensation immediately, by whatever legal means of appropriation might have been required by its own law or general statutes. Statute providing that where compensation is awarded to an employee of a self-insured city, treasurer on presentation of award shall forthwith begin payment of it does not excuse a self-insured municipality from obligation to pay compensation at once in absence of a controversy.

La.—Carrington v. Consolidated Underwriters, App., 80 So.2d 427, judgment amended on other grounds 89 So.2d 399, 230 La. 939.

Excuse for delay

(1) Failure of employer or its compensation carrier, within fourteen days after date of employee's demand, to pay sum awarded doctor by workmen's compensation commissioner would not be excused by failure of doctor to present for payment compensation carrier's draft in a lesser amount, in view of fact that employer or compensation carrier failed to pay difference between the amount awarded and amount of the draft within the two-week period.
Kan.—Owen v. Ready Made Buildings, Inc., 313 P.2d 267, 181 Kan. 659.

(2) Fact that, at time of hearing before workmen's compensation commissioner, employer agreed to assume all of employee's medical bills would not afford legal excuse for failure of employer or its compensation carrier to make payment of unpaid compensation within time required by workmen's compensation act provision requiring payment within two weeks after employee's written demand on penalty that otherwise employer would be liable to pay the entire award.

treasurer to collect and deposit the income and revenue from designated state properties and make disbursements therefrom for carrying out its purposes.⁴⁵ In a jurisdiction in which the state accident fund is not required to issue insurance policies to state departments insured by it because its liability for compensation for injuries to employees of departments of the government is not based on contract but is fixed by statute, a statute providing that medical expenses shall be paid by the state institution in which the employee is serving at the time of his injury and that the premium or assessment required to be paid to the state accident fund by the various state departments shall not cover medical and hospital services is not repealed by implication by a statute which provides what insurance policies covering employers who elect to become subject to the workmen's compensation law shall contain.⁴⁶

Liability for injuries to school teachers. Under a workmen's compensation act which includes all school districts within its provisions and requires them to compensate their employees in case of injury, but confers the option on them to contribute to the state insurance fund and insure the payment of compensation from that fund, or to pay the same direct to the injured employee, where a school district is not insured in the state insurance fund it must pay compensation awarded an injured school teacher from the funds raised by taxation for the support and maintenance of the schools.⁴⁷

§ 827. Liability of Several Employers of Employee

Liability for the payment of a compensation award where the claimant had several employers is discussed supra § 46.

Examine Pocket Parts for later cases.

§ 828. Liability of Successive Employers and Insurance Carriers

Liability for payment of a compensation award as between successive employers and insurance carriers is discussed supra §§ 46, 376.

§ 829. To Whom Payment Made

The compensation commission has continuous jurisdiction of the payment of an award, and may require that payments be made to one other than the person originally designated to receive them.

The commission charged with the administration of the compensation statute has continuous jurisdiction of the payments and can at any time when necessary or convenient require the employer or insurance carrier to make payments to another than the one who was originally designated to receive them,⁴⁸ as by the substitution of a dependent possessing a superior right in the place of the person to whom the payments were first ordered to be made.⁴⁹ The board or commission should require the award to be applied for the benefit of those for whom it is intended,⁵⁰ and should likewise protect those who are required to pay from assuming unnecessary risks.⁵¹ Where a compensation judgment is paid to the clerk of the court in which it is rendered, the clerk in the absence of statutory inhibition may pay it out to the attorney of the claimant.⁵² Where compensation awards are made separately to a husband and a wife, the wife's share should be paid directly to the wife and not to the husband as community property.⁵³ The employer or insurance carrier is not concerned with, and cannot object to, whom the payments are directed to be made, provided always that they are protected in making the payments.⁵⁴

In case the claimant dies, compensation due him may be paid to his executor or administrator.⁵⁵ A

Special provision may be made for the payment to a state official of a compensation award which cannot be paid to the nonresident entitled to it because of war conditions.⁵⁸

Liens and claims against award. A compensation award may be subjected to claims for support by the wife or children of the person to whom the award is made.⁵⁹ Provision is sometimes made for a lien against the compensation award for payments or advances for the reasonable living expenses of the claimant or his dependents.⁶⁰ Under some statutes, the unemployment compensation fund is entitled to a lien against a workmen's compensation award covering disability during a period for which unemployment benefits were paid to the claimant,⁶¹

but unless such procedure is authorized by law the unemployment compensation fund is not to be reimbursed out of the workmen's compensation award.⁶²

Head of family. Under some compensation acts it is proper for the commission to make the award of a death benefit to the head of a dependent family to be used for the common support of all dependents,⁶³ and where the head of such a family dies during the period compensation is being paid the award may be modified so as to make the remaining payments payable to the surviving dependents.⁶⁴ Where the children of a deceased employee by a divorced wife were wholly dependent on him, and his second wife was also wholly dependent, it is competent for her to consent to a binding decree ordering payment of compensation to be divided between her and the children, although she was found entitled to the total compensation.⁶⁵

Statute providing that a "disability payment which shall be payable for one week in advance as wages" shall be paid to employee temporarily disabled by injury was held not to mean that such payments or any award of industrial accident commission shall constitute "wages," as used in statute authorizing payment of wages of a minor to such, minor, in absence of contrary direction from guardian or parent.

Cal.—Pollock v. Industrial Accident Commission, 54 P.2d 695, 5 C.2d 205.

Payment to minor does not discharge obligation

Payment of compensation award, directly to minor employee was held commission, or court need not require it to be paid to a legally appointed and qualified guardian of such minor dependent or dependents,⁶⁷ and may order payment to the surviving widow in behalf of the minor children,⁶⁸ or appoint a person as trustee to whom the payments are to be made,⁶⁹ and the statute may provide for direct payment to a minor claimant.⁷⁰

If a mother to whom an award is paid neglects the minors, they may ask for an order directing their share of the compensation to be paid to a guardian for their use and benefit.⁷¹ Where the infant has been committed to an institution, the award may be paid to the public authorities to be applied to the infant's support and maintenance.⁷² A child acquires no rights in an award made to the mother, determined to be the sole dependent of the deceased employee, where the widow's rights in the award terminate by her remarriage.⁷³

Insane or aged person. A compensation award to an incompetent should be paid to the committee or guardian of the incompetent or to a trustee for him.⁷⁴ The committee or guardian of an insane person to whom payment of an award is being made ineffectual to discharge employer's indebtedness created by award, in view of provision of probate code requiring payments in sums exceeding two hundred and fifty dollars to be made to guardian, and other provisions indicating policy to prevent minors from directly handling their own money.

Compensation is a "property right" generally to be used in support of dependent claimants, and someone authorized by law to collect and expend it is contemplated.

Prior payments to guardian

Where supreme court determined that dependent son over age eighteen and dependent son under age eighteen were entitled to share in death benefits, sums already paid by insurance carrier to guardian of sons should be held by such guardian for benefit of both sons in the proportions that it should be determined that they were entitled to share in the death benefits.

Wis.—Krueger v. Industrial Commission, 295 N.W. 33, 237 Wis. 153.

Amount of award

Where compensation claimant was seventeen years of age when he received injury, claim for compensation was properly filed by claimant's father, and award and resultant payments for temporary total disability in an amount of less than three hundred dollars to father was authorized under compensation act, although father was not appointed claimant's guardian, but proceedings whereby award and payment were made to father in excess of amount of three hundred dollars for specific loss and disfigurement were voidable at election of claimant upon his becoming of age, and claimant was thereafter entitled to hearing before Industrial Commission as to damages for specific loss and disfigurement without a new claim being filed.

Qualification as tutrix

Widow of employee who was killed in course of employment was not required under the compensation act to qualify as tutrix of her minor children in order legally to demand and to receive compensation for the benefit of the children, but the fact that she did qualify as tutrix did not alter her right individually to demand and receive what the act allowed for the children.

La.—Litton v. Natchitoches Oil Mill, supra.

Matter of convenience

Under compensation act, the right of a widow to petition for and to receive compensation due a dependent child is one of convenience and is not absolute.

An award as death benefits to dependent incompetent adult daughter of deceased employee, with direction that it be paid to the director of state hospital for benefit of the incompetent was warranted by mental hygiene law and award would be affirmed on the assumption that the director of the hospital would use the award to provide luxuries and comforts for the incompetent and not for or on account of her cost and maintenance in the hospital.

may be required to make a disclosure to the board or commission of the disposition made of the moneys received under the award.⁷⁵ The commission may order an award for an aged applicant to be paid to a trustee for him.⁷⁶

§ 830. Apportionment of Payment

Apportionment of payment may be ordered in a proper case.

In a proceeding to compel the surety on a self-insurer's bond to pay compensation awards against the self-insurer, it is proper, where the sum of the awards exceeds the amount of the bond, to order payments to the compensation claimants to be made by the surety in pro rata proportion.⁷⁷ Where an award is divided between the widow and minor dependents of a deceased employee, the decree should not prorate the share of the minor dependents at the time they reach an age when they will no longer be entitled to it.⁷⁸

§ 831. Deductions and Offsets

Payments made on account of the injury may be credited in payment of the award.

It is the duty of the board or commission to ascertain any payments made by the employer or insurer for the injury and to give credit on the award for such payments.⁷⁹ Overpayments made by mistake may be charged against subsequent payments.⁸⁰ Where an employer claims that payments were made under an agreement for reimbursement, under a provision that the employer might at his option advance any sums under conditions provided in the act and should be entitled to reimbursement by his insurance carrier out of an unpaid installment or installments of compensation due, no reimbursement can be due until an award is made.⁸¹

§ 832. Compromise

The board may be authorized to approve the compromise of a payment in default.

The state industrial board has no power, in the exercise of an authority to compromise a payment in default, to grant a larger award to a claimant than he was otherwise entitled to receive under the statute, and place that extra burden upon one who was not a party to the compromise agreement.⁸² So, where awards of compensation have been made against two partners as uninsured employers, and the compensation board approved a compromise settlement of the liability of one of the partners by his payment of a lump sum to claimant in full of his liability, the board holding that the liability of the other partner was not to be affected by the settlement, a later award against such partner of the full amount of the joint award, plus subsequent awards, without credit for any part of the settlement, is error.⁸³

§ 833. Accord and Satisfaction

Payment of a final award may constitute an accord and satisfaction.

It is only where an award for compensation has become final and payment of the award has been made that such award and payment constitute accord and satisfaction.⁸⁴ The receipt and retention

Subject to approval of court

Under statute providing for deduction of any overpayments under workmen's compensation law "subject to the approval of the court," the quoted phrase means that any agreement of the parties is subject to inquisitorial power of the court in a proper proceeding, but does not make court's approval a condition precedent to a valid adjustment. Idea against unpaid compensation

§ 835. Recovery Back

Compensation paid under an award cannot be recovered unless the award was void or obtained by fraud, but excessive payments may under some circumstances be recovered.

Where, under the workmen's compensation act, compensation is lawfully paid to one entitled thereto by the terms of the award, the recipient cannot be required to pay it back,⁸⁷ but recovery is allowed where the compensation award was void⁸⁸ or was secured through fraudulent misrepresentation.⁸⁹

Excess payments made by mistake may be recovered,⁹⁰ and recovery may be had of payments made in excess of the amount subsequently awarded.⁹¹ Where an employer pays his employee full tion of action to recover on theory of unjust enrichment amount paid deceased employee's widow, after her remarriage, in excess of amount to which she was entitled under compensation agreement since employer had no remedy available within framework of workmen's compensation act.

Advancement
Where the workmen's compensation commission granted to widow wages or an amount in excess of that ultimately determined to be the amount of compensation the employee is entitled to, the employer may be entitled to credit for his payments, but cannot recover the overpayments, since they are deemed a gratuity.⁹²

Where compensation is commuted, but the one entitled thereto dies before receiving the full amount placed in trust for his benefit, the employer cannot recover the remaining balance.⁹³ On the other hand, where an employer, required to make periodic payments to a widow until her remarriage, made a commuted payment under the compulsion of an invalid order, and the widow remarried, the employer was entitled to recover part of the payment.⁹⁴

A general employer who pays compensation to a "loaned employee" may recover from the special employer.⁹⁵

B. ENFORCEMENT

§ 836. In General

Under some, but not other, statutes the compensation commission is authorized to enforce its awards.

Under some compensation acts the commission has no power to enforce its own awards,⁹⁶ and the only way an agreement of the parties or a decision of the board as to compensation can be enforced is by a proceeding in a particular court.⁹⁷ Under the practice in some jurisdictions an order or award of the compensation authorities is enforceable by contempt proceedings.⁹⁸

Under other workmen's compensation acts the board, commission, or department authorized to make compensation awards has the further authority and power to enforce said awards by appropriate orders to be made thereafter as it may find lump-sum advance payment to enable her to purchase certain equipment for operation of her home and farm and to cover specified items of personal expense, and widow terminated right to further compensation by remarriage, commission was authorized to order refund of amount paid to her in anticipation of future payments which it had been assumed she would be entitled to receive before remarriage.

necessary in order to provide injured employees the relief to which they are entitled by the terms of their awards,⁹⁹ and an order enforcing a compensation award of the commission is neither a rescission, an alteration, nor an amendment of such award so as to be in violation of a statute prohibiting the rescission, alteration, or amendment of an award after the lapse of a specified time.¹ The jurisdiction to enforce an order awarding compensation to continue indefinitely, and until the termination of a specified need therefor, includes the jurisdiction to decide if it should be enforced,² that is, if the need specified still exists;³ and the jurisdiction so to decide necessarily implies the jurisdiction to deny if the need does not exist.⁴ The commission has the power, pending the final determination of a controversy before it, to enforce interlocutory findings, orders, and awards made by it in the same manner as a final award.⁵

One seeking to enforce a compensation award cannot repudiate the limitations or restrictions with which the benefits of the award are burdened.⁶

Lien. The statutes generally provide that a compensation award shall constitute a lien;⁷ but such an award is a lien only when and to the extent provided by statute.⁸ Under some acts provision is made for the docketing of an award for a workman's compensation in a designated court and for giving it the force and effect of a judgment, or for the filing of the decision of the court, when the application is to the court, and giving it a like effect.⁹ Under other statutes an award is a lien against the assets of the employer or insurer without making it a matter of public record through filing, recording, or docketing.¹⁰ Some statutes give to a claim for compensation the same lien as is given to a claim for wages.¹¹

Right to certified copy of award. Under a compensation act providing for the filing of a certified copy of the award of the commission, claimant for compensation is ordinarily entitled to a certified copy thereof,¹² except that, under some acts where it is deemed desirable to stay the enforcement of an award, the commission may refuse to issue a certified copy thereof.¹³

Special funds for a variety of purposes have been established under workmen's compensation acts.¹⁴ Payments of compensation from a special fund may be made only in accordance with statutory authority.¹⁵ Provision is generally made for the payment of an award from a special fund where the award cannot be enforced against the employer or his insurer, as where they are insolvent or outside the jurisdiction.¹⁶

W.Va.—State ex rel. Mountain Fuel Co. v. Trent, supra.

(3) Industrial commission rule, that should one accident result in death of three or more employees that portion of the aggregate award in excess of fifteen thousand dollars shall be charged as a catastrophe loss against the state surplus fund, is not applicable where the employer is self-insured, since self-insured employers must pay the compensation due their injured employees, and the state insurance fund, which is the only fund created, can be disbursed only to such employees of employers as have paid into the fund.

claimant's attorney's fees and prevent charging of unreasonable fees, not to assess fees against department, except where board errs and accident fund is affected, so that such fees will not be awarded against department, where board's decision is upheld by court.

Wash.—Harbor Plywood Corp. v. Department of Labor and Industries of State of Wash., 295 P.2d 310, 48 Wash.2d 553.

(2) An injured workman, successfully resisting in superior court review of industrial insurance appeals board's order sustaining award of compensation to him and securing affirmation of order on certiorari by department of labor and industries, is not entitled to attorney's fee payable from administrative fund of department, since such fee is payable therefrom under statute only where board's order is reversed or modified.

"Compensation"

Under 1941 amendment of compensation act providing that employees then receiving or who might thereafter become entitled to receive "compensation" for permanent total disability should be paid from special fund, word "compensation" is used in identical sense it is used in defining compensation for wages lost on account of accident for which ten thousand dollars compensation is paid; receipt of medical, surgical and nursing benefits by disabled employee, who, prior to 1941 amendment of compensation act, had received full amount of compensation payment allowed by the act, did not make him eligible for participation in special fund made available by 1941 amendment of the act providing special fund to an employee "now receiving, or who may hereafter become entitled to receive compensation for permanent total disability." Fund for payment of compensation for disability due to pre-existing impairment. In order to further the employment of handicapped workers,¹⁹ a special fund, variously referred to as a subsequent injury fund or a one per cent fund, has been established in many jurisdictions to assist in the payment of compensation awarded to handicapped workers.²⁰

Maximum compensation

Statute providing for additional compensation from special fund to widow with dependent child receiving compensation for death of husband and father after "maximum collectible compensation" has been paid uses quoted phrase as meaning maximum compensation provided by statute for death of husband and father and not the maximum which under facts of a particular case is collectible as compensation.

Other statements of purpose

(1) Section of the compensation act dealing with disposition and use of the one per cent fund was intended to insure an employee full compensation where a compensable disability succeeds but has no causative connection with the results of a prior disability, the combination of the two leaving the employee permanently and totally disabled, and was intended to relieve employer of undue burden of a prior disability, with which or its results, the disability arising in his employ has no causative connection.

N.J.—Balash v. Harper, 70 A.2d 747, 8 N.J. 497.

(2) The purpose of provision of longshoremen's compensation act making employer liable for disability caused by subsequent injury which in combination with previous disability causes permanent total disability, but providing that remainder of compensation for permanent total disability should be paid from special fund established for that purpose was to aid employees who become partially and permanently disabled through causes unconnected with industrial accident.

U.S.—Lawson v. Suwanee Fruit & S. S. Co., C.C.A.Fla., 166 F.2d 13, affirmed 69 S.Ct. 503, 336 U.S. 198, 93 L.Ed. 611.

(3) The legislative purpose in the one per cent fund statute providing for additional payment of compensation to totally disabled employees was to rehabilitate injured employees and not the providing for pensions, the fund being insufficient for such purpose.

N.J.—Tortoriello v. Toohey, 3 A.2d 805, 121 N.J.Law 604, affirmed 8 A.2d 291, 123 N.J.Law 202.

War veterans

Purpose of statute providing for payment of part of compensation for permanent partial disability resulting from combined effect of industrial injury and previous disability from subsequent injuries fund is to encourage the employment of physically handicapped persons, particularly veterans, and to make a logical and equitable adjustment of the liability under workmen's compensation law. Cal.—State v. Industrial Acc. Commission, 306 P.2d 64, 147 C.A.2d 818.

Nonresidents

Act creating special indemnity fund applies to all physically impaired employees sustaining subsequent compensable injuries while performing work in state and is not limited in its benefits to residents of state.

Okl.—Special Indem. Fund v. Hill, 186 P.2d 72, 199 Okl. 329.

Supplement to statute

Special indemnity fund act is not, strictly speaking, amendatory of the workmen's compensation law, but is supplementary thereto.

Remedial act

Special indemnity fund act is remedial in character, and liberal construction of the act should be indulged, if necessary, to give effect to the purpose intended by the legislature.

Okl.—Special Indem. Fund of Okl. v. Wade, 189 P.2d 609, 199 Okl. 547.

Strict construction

Labor code must be strictly construed to effect its beneficent purposes; and this rule extends to construction of provisions relating to subsequent injuries fund.

Enforceable right

A workman who is within the purview of the one per cent fund for the payment of compensation for disability for which an employer is not liable has a legal right to participation therein which the court will enforce.

Control by commission

Whether the industrial commission has exercised a sound discretion as to the allowance or denial of disability benefits from the special compensation fund must be ascertained wholly in the light of the facts of each case.

The action of a deputy commissioner of compensation in recommending to commissioner of labor that an employee be accorded benefits of so-called one per cent fund was not a "final judgment" which was binding upon commissioner.

Venue

The venue of injured employee's suit to set aside industrial accident board's award of less than amount of compensation claimed by plaintiff under the second injury fund amendment to workmen's compensation act was properly laid in county where plaintiff's second injury occurred.

Under the statutes establishing such funds, it is provided in substance that where a previously disabled employee suffers a subsequent compensable injury in the course of his employment, and he is entitled to compensation in a measure greater than the injury caused by the last accident, considered alone, as discussed supra § 298, the liability for compensation is apportioned between the employer or insurer and the special fund established by the statute,²¹ the employer or insurer being liable only for the disability due to the subsequent injury, as discussed supra § 298, and the special fund being liable for the balance of the compensation.²² Under some statutes, the procedure is for the award to run

ter for decision of compensation commissioner.

W.Va.—Wheeling Metal & Manufacturing Co. v. Workmen's Compensation Com'r, 2 S.E.2d 252, 121 W.Va. 155.

Right of review

(1) A "party interested" having right to review industrial commission's award determining compensation payable by employer and by special indemnity fund to physically impaired person suffering permanent partial disability and thereafter sustaining accidental injury must have a present, direct, pecuniary interest in the subject matter and suffer fancied or real wrong in the particular case.

Okl.—Cameron & Henderson v. Franks, 184 P.2d 965, 199 Okl. 143.

(2) The last employer of physically impaired person suffering permanent partial disability and thereafter sustaining accidental injury has present, direct, pecuniary interest in award in view of provisions in workmen's compensation law requiring employer to pay compensation for disability caused by last injury and special indemnity fund to pay compensation for disability attributable to former injury, and hence is "party interested" having right to review award.

Okl.—Cameron & Henderson v. Franks, supra.

Parties

(1) Where an employee asserts a claim against the fund, the state is a necessary and proper party.

Cal.—State (Subsequent Injuries Fund) v. Industrial Acc. Commission, 373 P.2d 342, 126 C.A.2d 740.

(2) The state treasurer was not a necessary party to workmen's compensation proceeding against industrial special indemnity fund and treasurer was not required to be given notice of injury.

Idaho.—Anderson v. Potlatch Forests, 291 P.2d 859, 77 Idaho 263.

Time for claim

(1) Limitations as to the time of giving notice of the injury and instituting proceedings for an award do not apply as to a claim against the second injury fund where such requirements have been met as against the employer.

Idaho.—Anderson v. Potlatch Forests, supra.

(2) Section of the labor code providing that nothing in the chapter shall bar right of any injured employee to institute proceedings for collection of compensation within five years after date of injury on ground that original injury has caused new and further disability and that jurisdiction of industrial accident commission shall be continuing jurisdiction at all times within five years from date of injury applies to proceedings for special additional compensation from the subsequent injuries fund.

Cal.—Subsequent Injuries Fund v. Industrial Acc. Commission, 244 P. 2d 889, 39 C.2d 88.

(3) Fact that employee may file claim against subsequent injuries fund within five years after date of injury and have it heard and determined after expiration of that period, did not entitle fund to same privilege.

Cal.—State v. Industrial Acc. Commission, App., 318 P.2d 194.

Commutation of payments

Where the liability of the special compensation fund for total disability benefits is established, the compensation benefits periodically payable from such fund may in a proper case be commuted to one or more lump-sum payments.

Minn.—Senske v. Fairmont & Waseca Canning Co., 45 N.W.2d 640, 232 Minn. 350.

Employer's payments made first

(1) The payments to be made by special indemnity fund under an award against it begin when the payments have ceased under award made against employer.

Okl.—Special Indem. Fund v. Bryant, 239 P.2d 1014, 205 Okl. 630.

(2) Where settlement on a joint petition had been approved by state industrial commission and payment thereof made by employer in a lump sum, commission had authority to order that payment on award against the special indemnity fund commence immediately thereafter.

Okl.—Special Indem. Fund v. Bryant, supra.

Settlement with employer

If an award is once made on a properly approved settlement, such an award may be considered as establishing that the employee's right to compensation for which the employer alone is responsible has been exhausted, and to provide the necessary prerequisite to a consideration of whether the employee is entitled to receive further benefits from the special fund by reason of combined disability which is both permanent and total.

Minn.—Senske v. Fairmont & Waseca Canning Co., 45 N.W.2d 640, 232 Minn. 350.

Attorney's fees

(1) The statute providing for payments from the one per cent fund to persons totally disabled as result of experiencing a subsequent permanent injury when claimant has previously been partially disabled from some other cause does not authorize an award of costs and attorney's fee to claimant, notwithstanding statute is consolidated with workmen's compensation legislation which does provide for allowance of costs and attorneys' fees to claimants.

N.J.—El v. Toohey, 14 A.2d 531, 125 N.J.Law 150, affirmed 17 A.2d 165, 125 N.J.Law 510.

(2) In making an award against special indemnity fund, state industrial commission was authorized to order payments of attorneys' fees in addition to the periodic payments to be made to claimant.

Okl.—Special Indem. Fund v. Bryant, 239 P.2d 1014, 205 Okl. 630—Special Indem. Fund v. Hobbs, 164 P.2d 980, 196 Okl. 313.

(3) Attorneys' fees awarded to claimant's attorneys and ordered paid from special indemnity fund in weekly installments of twenty-five dollars constituted compensation payments, and hence, in making award against special indemnity fund of twenty-five dollars per week to claimant, state industrial commission had no authority to order that payment of attorneys' fee commence immediately, since such payments together with compensation payments to claimant would exceed maximum compensation payments of twenty-five dollars per week allowed by statute.

Okl.—Special Indem. Fund v. Bryant, supra.

Deduction for prior disability

(1) In computing amount of award against special indemnity fund in favor of employee, who was a physically impaired person due to prior injuries, state industrial commission should have first computed total of employee's disability resulting from all of injuries, then computed degree of disability which constituted employee a physically impaired person by reason of prior injuries on percentage of body as a whole and subtracted the same, together with award for last injury, from total award and then assessed remainder against special indemnity fund.

Okl.—Special Indem. Fund v. Jordan, 232 P.2d 220—Special Indem. Fund v. Goad, 281 P.2d 179—Special Indem. Fund v. Osborne, 272 P.2d 392—Special Indem. Fund of State v. Dickinson, 253 P.2d 161, 208 Okl. 39—Special Indem. Fund of State v. Woodrow, 245 P.2d 445, 206 Okl. 580—Miller v. Harmon Const. Co., 237 P.2d 439, 205 Okl. 280—Howard v. Special Indem. Fund, 227 P.2d 641, 204 Okl. 207—Special Indem. Fund of Okl. v. Hewes, 214 P.2d 240, 202 Okl. 356—Special Indem. Fund v. Jennings, 205 P.2d 873, 201 Okl. 330—Special Indem. Fund v. Ward, 185 P.2d 186, 199 Okl. 196.

(2) Where claimant was a physically impaired person by reason of two prior injuries which were combinable, industrial commission should, have required evidence to establish degree of disability occasioned by such injuries and to find thereon as to percentage of disability and to deduct percentage so found, from the

against the employer or carrier, and the carrier or the fund.²³ employer is entitled to partial reimbursement from In order to apportion liability, it is necessary to total disability before making an award against the special indemnity fund.

Okl.—Special Indem. Fund v. Jennings, supra.

(3) Special Indemnity Fund is not entitled to a deduction from award to workman and against fund when degree of disability caused by a combination of disabilities to workman is materially greater than that which would have resulted from last injury alone when combined injuries result in a permanent total disability.

Okl.—Ravelin Min. Co. v. Viers, 200 P.2d 433, 201 Okl. 12.

(4) Where state industrial commission found that claimant was a physically impaired person within meaning of section of compensation act dealing with compensation for additional disability and payment from special Indemnity Fund, to extent of twenty-five per cent permanent partial disability to his right hand and twenty per cent permanent partial disability to his left hand, and that he suffered a subsequent injury to extent of thirty per cent of his left leg, award which ignored degree of disability contributed by injury to left hand was unauthorized. Okl.—Special Indem. Fund v. Neal, 192 P.2d 660, 200 Okl. 242.

(5) Where claimant is permanently and totally disabled, no deduction is to be made from the award against the fund because of claimant's prior impairment.

Okl.—Special Indem. Fund v. Long, 281 P.2d 933—Special Indem. Fund v. Neal, supra.

(6) Prior to the amendment of the statute no deduction from the award against the fund was made because of the earlier injury.

Okl.—Special Indem. Fund v. Bodine, 199 P.2d 199, 200 Okl. 653—Special Indem. Fund v. Hill, 186 P.2d 72, 199 Okl. 329—Special Indem. Fund v. Farmer, 156 P.2d 815, 195 Okl. 262.

(7) Where employer's insurance carrier paid workman, on joint petition settlement, two hundred dollars bonus over sum fixed by industrial commission as amount to which claimant was entitled by reason of new injury, it was not necessary that such bonus be deducted from award against special indemnity fund for increased disability resulting by reason of fact that claimant was a previously impaired person.

Okl.—Special Indem. Fund v. Horne, 254 P.2d 988, 208 Okl. 218.

(8) In proceeding for workmen's compensation for injury to foot where claimant claimed to be physically impaired person by reason of prior injury to hand, evidence sustained industrial commission's finding that disability to hand should be computed on basis of five hundred dollars, although state on behalf of special indemnity fund claimed that records of proceeding in another state, which were admitted in evidence, showed award of larger amount for hand injury.

Okl.—Special Indem. Fund v. Osborne, 272 P.2d 392.

(9) In determining amount of compensation to which injured employee is entitled from second injury fund, created by amendment to workmen's compensation act, for total permanent disability, amounts of payments made or benefits provided by such act for his prior injuries cannot be charged against him.

Tex.—State v. Bothe, Civ.App., 231 S.W.2d 453.

(10) An employee becoming totally disabled by loss of leg after loss of other leg in previous accident was entitled to payment from second injury fund of difference between maximum compensation for total permanent disability and combination of payments for second injury, without deduction of amount received in settlement of his claim for previous loss of one leg.

Tex.—State v. Bothe, supra.

(11) Under amendment providing where employee is totally and permanently incapacitated after second injury that in addition to compensation for second injury and after combination of payments therefor employee should be paid out of second injury fund compensation that would be due for total and permanent incapacity, word "therefor" refers to payments for second injury and word combination indicates total compensation payable for second injury, including all installments actually paid and those payable in the future, should be deducted, and there is no basis in language of amendment for holding that deduction should be made for amount which would have been payable for a first injury if such injury were compensable.

Tex.—Miers v. Industrial Acc. Bd., 232 S.W.2d 671, 149 Tex. 270.

Reservation of fund's liability

In proceeding against employer because of recent injury, wherein special indemnity fund is made a party by reason of claimant being physically impaired person, state industrial commission, in its discretion, may make award against employer in favor of claimant for the recent injury and reserve question of award against the fund, where order for such reservation can be made without substantial prejudice to parties involved.

Okl.—Berna v. Maloney-Crawford Tank Co., 281 P.2d 736.

Award against employer

When an award on stipulation is once made, and constitutes a properly approved settlement in full on employer's liability, award establishes that employee's right to compensation for which employer alone is responsible has been exhausted, and provides necessary prerequisite to consideration of whether employee is entitled to receive further benefits from special compensation fund by reason of combined disability which is both permanent and total.

Death of claimant

Labor code section providing that workman's death shall not affect his employer's liability for compensation in so far as its liability has accrued and become payable at date of death, has no application to awards against subsequent injuries fund.

County as employer is entitled to the benefits of reimbursement from the special fund to the same extent as private employers.

Elected employee

No distinction will be made between an elected employee and a privately hired one solely on basis the former was elected by voters instead of employed by an individual or board of directors, in determining eligibility of county for reimbursement under workmen's compensation law authorizing reimbursement from special fund for compensation or death benefits in case disability or death would not have occurred except for pre-existing permanent physical disability.

Silicosis cases

In view of expressed purposes of the workmen's compensation law to make silicosis cases compensable without limit and irrespective of previous disability, and to impose a substantial part of the burden on industry as a whole, workmen's compensation board should not have denied employer and state insurance fund reimbursement under the workmen's compensation law for total disability payments made to claimant for disability due to silicosis, merely because no formal, written notice of claim for reimbursement was filed as required by the workmen's compensation law.

Computation of time; medical benefits

(1) Workmen's compensation act, permitting reimbursement from special disability fund for all compensation and medical benefits subsequent to those payable for first one hundred and four weeks of disability, did not express a legislative intention that a claimant must have received both medical benefits and compensation for one hundred and four weeks if carrier was to be reimbursed for further payments of either, and insurance carrier was entitled to reimbursement for medical benefits paid after one hundred and four weeks even though claimant was paid compensation for only twenty-eight and five sixths weeks of disability.

N.Y.—Mastrodonato v. Pfaudler Co., 123 N.E.2d 83, 307 N.Y. 592.

(2) Provision of workmen's compensation law for reimbursement of insurance carrier from special disability fund for all compensation and medical benefits subsequent to those payable for first one hundred and four weeks of injured employee's disability authorizes reimbursement of carrier for medical benefits paid after one hundred and four weeks of medical impairment and compensation paid after such period of financial impairment, so that workmen's compensation board erred in directing reimbursement of carrier from such fund for all compensation payable after one hundred and four weeks from first day of employee's disability, where carrier actually paid only six weeks compensation.

N.Y.—Hastings v. Hugh T. Beckwith, Inc., 163 N.Y.S.2d 754, 4 A.D.2d 714.

(3) The term "medical benefits" in provision of workmen's compensation law for reimbursement of insurance carrier from special disability fund for all compensation and medical benefits subsequent to those payable for first one hundred and four weeks of injured employee's disability means expenses, whenever and however infrequently incurred, for medical disability or impairment existing for such period, while "compensation benefits" mean weekly payments.

N.Y.—Hastings v. Hugh T. Beckwith, Inc., supra.

Death benefits; funeral expenses

"Death benefits" under provision of the workmen's compensation law that employer or insurance carrier shall, in the first instance, pay funeral expenses and death benefits in case of death of disabled person, but that employer or insurance carrier shall be reimbursed from the special disability fund for all "death benefits" payable in excess of one hundred and four weeks, do not include funeral expenses, and employer and insurance carrier are not entitled to reimbursement for funeral expenses.

Compensation paid for first accident not counted

(1) Where employee sustained back injury for which he was compensated and thereafter returned to work at a lighter job at lower wages, and there suffered a second back injury, resulting in partial disability attributable equally to the two accidents, employer was entitled to reimbursement from special disability fund only for awards exceeding one hundred and four weeks after second accident, but not to reimbursement after first one hundred and four weeks of disability for both accidents.

N.Y.—Gessi v. Kennedy Valve Mfg. Co., 146 N.Y.S.2d 851, 1 A.D.2d 712.

(2) Workmen's compensation board properly held that employer was not entitled to reimbursement from special disability fund for disability compensation paid employee in excess of one hundred and four weeks, unless employer's liability as result of second of two accidental injuries sustained by employee in 1916 and 1918, respectively, exceeded

The statutes vary a good deal in their coverage, and the special fund is liable for compensation only where both the prior condition of the employee and his condition subsequent to an industrial injury meet the requirements of the statute.²⁶ Such statutes do not give the employer relief as to every accident that may be suffered by a handicapped employee.²⁷ In order for the fund to be liable, the second accident must be compensable;²⁸ the fund is not liable where the subsequent accident does not arise out of, and in the course of, employment and is compensable only on the theory that it is the result of or a complication of an earlier industrial injury.²⁹ Where the death or disability results solely from the earlier accident and is not contributed to by a subsequent accident, the fund is not liable.³⁰ Similarly, where the death³¹ or disability³² results solely from the last accident and is not substantially contributed to by the earlier impairment, the fund is not liable. Where the disability is the result of two accidents, the award is to be apportioned between the two accidents, and the special fund is liable only for its appropriate share of the portion of the award charged against the later accident.³³ It has been dred and four weeks, though his combined disability period as results of both accidents totaled one hundred sixty-three and eight-tenths weeks. N.Y.—Seaman v. Endicott Johnson Corp., 115 N.Y.S.2d 540, 280 App. Div. 904.

Oklahoma rule

(1) To authorize award of compensation against special indemnity fund, claimant must show that he was a physically impaired person, that he suffered another compensable injury resulting in additional permanent disability combinable with disability because of previous impairment, and that combination of both disabilities is materially greater than that which would have resulted from subsequent injury alone.

Suicide

Evidence that employee who had lost all vision of right eye during infancy and who had previously suffered a forty per cent permanent loss of use of left eye as result of accident while working for another employer sustained additional injuries to left eye as result of accident during course of his employment causing him to suffer a sixty per cent loss of use of that member, and that employee thereafter, while suffering from depressive psychosis, committed suicide supported finding that employee's death was due solely to accidental injuries and that award of death benefits should not be made against special fund for reopened cases under workmen's compensation law.

Loss of eyes; defective vision

Prior organic or functional perfection or visual normality is not a conditional prerequisite to liability for statutory compensation for the total and permanent loss of the faculty of sight, and in such circumstances the statute providing compensation payments from the one per cent fund for subsequent permanent injuries has no application, since there is a compensable total disability as result of the loss of both eyes as a result of one accident.

indicated that the subsequent injury fund is not liable where the last accident aggravates, activates, or accelerates the pre-existing condition.³⁴

Ordinarily the fund is not liable unless the subsequent condition is permanent³⁵ and the subsequent disability is materially and substantially greater than would have resulted from the last accident alone,³⁶ or the subsequent injury or death is one which would not have occurred except for the prior impairment.³⁷ Under some statutes it is sufficient if the subsequent disability is greater than the disability that would have resulted from the last accident alone;³⁸ but under other statutes the fund is liable only where the claimant is totally and permanently disabled after the subsequent injury.³⁹

A permanent partial disability which was in existence at the time of the subsequent injury is a condition precedent to recovery from the special fund.⁴⁰

Disabilities which may be combined

(1) The Special Indemnity Fund Act is applicable if previous impairment be combinable under the workmen's compensation law with the later injury resulting from the compensable accident, treating the pre-existing injury as though it occurred at time of later injury and combined effects or disability of the pre-existing condition and the later accidental compensable injury is materially greater than the disability resulting from the later injury standing alone. Okl.—Special Indem. Fund of Okl. v. Wade, 189 P.2d 609, 199 Okl. 547.

(2) A schedule injury and a non-schedule injury may not be combined and considered as a disability to the body as a whole so as to subject the fund to liability for the disability in excess of that caused by the last injury except where the injuries result in total disability.

(3) Permanent partial disability to foot could not be combined with a previous disability to back so as to fix liability on the special indemnity fund, where the only medical testimony was that claimant had only sixty per cent permanent disability to the body as a whole as result of the combined injuries.

Okl.—Special Indem. Fund of State v. Kilgore, 219 P.2d 1001, 203 Okl. 241.

(4) Prior injury causing total loss of claimant's eye and subsequent injury to claimant's feet may be combined in making award against special indemnity fund, if by reason of such combination claimant has a disability materially greater in degree than that caused by injury to his feet alone.

Okl.—Special Indem. Fund v. Davidson, 162 P.2d 1016, 196 Okl. 118.

(6) Where evidence showed disability resulting from combination of pre-existing total loss of vision of one eye and permanent partial loss of use of foot by later compensable accident was materially greater in degree than that which resulted from the foot injury, an award for compensation against special indemnity fund was proper.

The burden of proof as to the previous disability or impairment rests on the claimant.

Minn.—Rikala v. Rundquist Const. Co., 77 N.W.2d 551, 247 Minn. 401.

The previous condition must be permanently and partially disabling, and capable of being fixed in definite percentage of disability.⁴¹ Under some statutes the prior impairment or disability must have affected earning power,⁴² and liability is not apportioned and the second injury fund is not liable where the employee was not so disabled prior to the accident that he was unable to perform his usual duties.⁴³ It would seem that where the employee was totally and permanently disabled at the time of the later accident no liability can be imposed on the fund,⁴⁴ but it has been held that an employee rated one hundred per cent disabled prior to the second injury was entitled to an award measured by his entire disability, and to recover from the special fund for that proportion of his disability which was not due to the second injury.⁴⁵

In view of the fact that the purpose of the establishment of second injury funds is to further the employment of handicapped workers, it has been held that there is no apportionment and the fund is not liable where the pre-existing impairment was not obvious or known to the employer,⁴⁶ or where

If actual knowledge of an elected county employee's pre-existing disability be deemed impossible solely because of the number of voters electing him, such knowledge should be imputed to county by law in determining county's eligibility for reimbursement from special disability fund.

N.Y.—Elling v. Ontario County Sheriff's Dept., 146 N.Y.S.2d 182, 286 App.Div. 628, affirmed 135 N.E.2d 591, 1 N.Y.2d 789, 153 N.Y.S.2d 55.

Extent of knowledge

(1) Where employer knew that claimant could not do his regular work following first accident, but there was no proof of knowledge of employer that, prior to second accident, first injury had resulted in a permanent condition, carrier was not entitled to reimbursement from special disability fund after one hundred and four weeks of disability following award of compensation upon second accident.

the claimant was not hired or retained in employ- | ment as a partially disabled person.⁴⁷ Thus the

(2) Where employer knew of employee's operation for removal of an intervertebral disc, but employer believed that employee had fully recovered at time of occurrence of subsequent accident, it could not be said that employer retained employee in his employ at that time with knowledge of an existing, permanent impairment, and employee's claim did not come within provisions of the second injury law, and employer was not entitled to reimbursement from the special fund under the second injury law.

N.Y.—Lusero v. Tronolone, 146 N.Y.S.2d 881, 1 A.D.2d 713.

(3) With respect to employer's right to reimbursement from special disability fund under second injury law, there is no requirement that employer have had medical evidence or knowledge to a point of medical certainty as to permanence of workman's first injury, and it is sufficient, in a case in which such injury was actually permanent, that employer have formed his own conclusion or belief that injury was permanent.

Knowledge of employer's wife

Proof of knowledge by employer's wife of slight physical disability or weakness of gardener did not necessarily require a finding by workmen's compensation board that employer had knowledge of permanent physical impairment of gardener, so as to charge special disability fund.

Mental condition

Where laborer was committed to state hospital in 1944 because suffering from permanent dementia praecox, paranoid type, but was granted a leave of absence several months later, and in 1947 he returned to work for employer and continued to work steadily until injury, which cost him the sight of an eye, and all medical men who examined him after injury, agreed that his mental condition was not a disabling factor in the field of normal labor, he was

Slight swelling or enlargement of ankles and knees of sixty-four-year old deputy county clerk, which did not result in pain, limitation of action, or weakness, and did not affect her performance on the job, did not constitute permanent partial "disability" or "impairment" within statute providing for payment of part of compensation for disability due to combined effect of industrial injury and previous disability or impairment from subsequent injuries fund.
Cal.—State v. Industrial Acc. Commission, 306 P.2d 64, 147 C.A.2d 818.

Knowledge due to family relationship

(1) That corporate officers of employer, who were sons of employee, knew of permanent physical impairment of employee before latter's employment because of family relationship could not defeat corporation's claim for reimbursement against special disability fund for payment of workmen's compensation benefits made after employee's injury and death under conditions meeting statutory test of disability before hiring.

(2) Where claimant was president of employer corporation and other officers were members of his family and all were aware that he had been suffering from diabetes and such condition aggravated the effects of his injury necessitating a partial amputation, award against the special disability fund was authorized as against contention that requirement of an informed decision by present or prospective employer was impossible of fulfillment under the circumstances and that the statute was not intended to benefit such a corporation.

Retention in employment after notice

(1) A continuance in employment, even at a change to lighter work, of one who to employer's knowledge has merely slowed down physically due only to advanced age is not within purview of "second injury law," and therefore, where employer gave seventy-two-year-old employee lighter work because of advanced age and employee sustained sacroiliac strain, which was aggravated by a pre-existing condition of osteoarthritis and arteriosclerosis, and employer did not know of such pre-existing condition, employer was not entitled to reimbursement from special disability fund for compensation paid.

N.Y.—Stophluben v. G. E. Van Vorst Co., 116 N.Y.S.2d 855, 280 App.Div. 1004.

(2) Where compensation claimant was actually suffering from a permanent condition of long standing due to a previous disease, and was continued in his employment after the fund is not liable for the portion of the subsequent disability due to a pre-existing heart condition which was unknown to the employer.⁴⁸

Ordinarily the liability of the fund is not limited to cases where the prior disability was due to the loss or the loss of the use of specific members,⁴⁹ but under some statutes the special fund is liable only where an employee suffered the loss or loss of use of an organ or member or loses another organ or member in an industrial accident.⁵⁰ The prior impairment need not be one which prevents the employee from doing his work in a normal and acceptable manner; the test is whether the impairment will adversely affect the claimant in obtaining or retaining employment.⁵¹

It is not a requisite to the imposition of liability on the fund that the prior injury be compensable or be sustained in the course of employment.⁵² While it has been held that the prior disability need not have been the result of an accident or injury,⁵³ and that the fund may be liable where the disability is a product of an industrial accident and a pre-existing disease,⁵⁴ a statute covering a person who has previously suffered a personal injury does not

(3) Under provision of compensation law giving employer or his insurance carrier a right to reimbursement from special disability fund for payment of compensation after first one hundred and four weeks to employee, who, while suffering from a permanent physical disability, suffers a subsequent disability by accident in course of employment, the express advice of a physician to an employer that condition is permanent is not necessary before reimbursement can be had, but is enough if the condition is actually permanent and the employer knows of the existence of the condition and is in a position to form some judgment as to whether it is temporary or permanent.

N.Y.—Dugan v. Muller Dairies, Inc., supra.

(4) In absence of proof in record that employee's dormant osteomyelitis condition, of which employer had notice in 1939, was liable to be aggravated by another accident, evidence would sustain board's finding that employer's retention of claimant in his employment had not brought claim within purview of subsection relieving employer from liability except for disability which would have resulted from injury if there had been no previous injury, and therefore special disability fund was properly discharged.

N.Y.—Harkins v. New York Dock Co., 113 N.Y.S.2d 600, 280 App.Div. 843, affirmed 112 N.E.2d 426, 305 N.Y. 652.

began, and not where it was suffered in the course of the employment.

"Physical loss"

Employee who sustained injury to right hand and arm resulting in permanent partial disability and who had sustained prior injury causing loss of use of left hand and who was unable physically to use right hand and arm and left hand suffered "physical loss" within provision of workmen's compensation law relating to industrial special indemnity fund and to permanent total disability after permanent partial disability, notwithstanding right hand and arm had not been amputated.

Settlement approved by commission

Claimant sustaining a subsequent injury was a "physically impaired person" within the meaning of the statute providing for compensation for additional disability, by virtue of a settlement for prior injury based upon form 14, filed, and approved by industrial commission, and such determination was final adjudication and binding in proceeding for compensation against special indemnity fund for additional disability sustained by claimant from the subsequent injury while working for different employer.

Okl.—Special Indem. Fund of State v. Stone, supra.

Loss of fingers

Employee who had lost two fingers was a "physically impaired person" within the special indemnity fund act, and, when thumb of the same hand was amputated because of subsequent injury resulting in additional permanent disability so that degree of disability caused by combination of both disabilities was materially greater than that which would have resulted from subsequent injury, remainder of disability after termination of employer's payment of per cent of disability which would have resulted from the subsequent injury alone was payable out of the special indemnity fund.

Walk with a limp due to injury which caused right leg to be an inch shorter than left leg made claimant a physically impaired person for purpose of fixing liability upon special indemnity fund for subsequent eye injury.

Okl.—Special Indem. Fund v. Dimpel, 207 P.2d 776, 201 Okl. 526.

Hip or back injury

(1) A pre-existing injury to a hip or back does not bring claimant within the statute.

Okl.—Special Indem. Fund of Okl. v. Wade, 189 P.2d 609, 199 Okl. 547.

(2) A hip injury that results directly in partial permanent disability to a leg is an injury to the leg and may be combined with a subsequent injury under the special indemnity fund act.

Okl.—Special Indem. Fund of Okl. v. Wade, supra.

Loss of use of finger

An employed person who has formerly lost the use of an index finger by reason of same becoming stiffened is a physically impaired person whose impairment is obvious and apparent from examination by an ordinary layman within workmen's compensation act relating to an award against the special indemnity fund.

Power to compromise claims

Control over the allowance of disability benefits from the publicly administered special compensation funds is wholly vested in the industrial commission, and no other official or department, in behalf of the state or in behalf of anyone else, has such ownership in or supervision over the fund as to empower them to compromise disability benefits or to make recommendations which are a material factor in the exercise of the industrial commission's discretion.

Minn.—Senske v. Fairmont & Waseca Canning Co., supra.

Claim against state

The special compensation fund is a fund which belongs to industry and is a public fund only in the sense that the public welfare is highly involved with its proper administration, and the injured workman's right to total disability benefits from the fund is not based upon any direct financial obligation of the state.

Minn.—Senske v. Fairmont & Waseca Canning Co., supra.

Attorney general

(1) An employee's claim for total disability benefits from the special compensation fund is not in the nature of a claim against the state which may be compromised and settled by the attorney general, and the attorney general's recommendation of such a compromise is not a material factor in ascertaining whether the industrial commission has abused its discretion in declining to approve such settlement.

Minn.—Senske v. Fairmont & Waseca Canning Co., supra.

(2) The attorney general may properly appear in workmen's compensation cases in behalf of the custodian of the special compensation fund in so far as that official's purely ministerial function is concerned.

Minn.—Senske v. Fairmont & Waseca Canning Co., supra.

(3) In the performance of his official duties, the opinions and recommendations given by attorney general to industrial commission are entitled to the greatest respect, but such opinions and recommendations cannot control or become a material factor in the exercise of the commission's discretion as to allowance or denial of disability benefits from the special compensation fund.

Minn.—Senske v. Fairmont & Waseca Canning Co., supra.

63. Minn.—Senske v. Fairmont & Waseca Canning Co., supra.

Duty to resist illegal disbursements

While the state treasurer's ministerial role gives him no discretionary control over payment of disability benefits from special compensation fund, the treasurer does have, by virtue of the inherent nature of his custodianship of the funds, a right and a duty, for the preservation of the fund, to resist disbursements and invasions which have no basis in law.

Purpose of fund

(1) Purpose of fund for reopened cases, which is maintained by assessment upon employers and carriers, is to establish a method by which risk of claims recurring beyond statutory period shall be borne by all.

N.Y.—Casey v. Hinkle Iron Works, 87 N.E.2d 419, 299 N.Y. 382.

(2) Purpose of establishment of special fund for reopened cases is to insure in a proper case the benefits of workmen's compensation law to injured workman regardless of prior denials and time limitations and also to cushion the burden to employer and carrier by relieving them from a continuing liability.

N.Y.—Watkins v. Cornwall Press, 63 N.Y.S.2d 23, 270 App.Div. 615.

(3) The purpose of the special fund provided for in workmen's compensation law is to relieve in part the burden upon employer or insurance carrier resulting from claims where there has been a recurrence after a lapse of years of a malady resulting from the injury received by a workman in the course of employment.

N.Y.—McDonnell v. City of New York, 3 N.Y.S.2d 685, 253 App.Div. 559.

Claimant's interest

A claimant, when not prejudiced thereby, has no concern with question of whether, because of lapse of time, his compensation is payable by employer or special fund for reopened cases.

N.Y.—Sturesky v. Straussman, 78 N.Y.S.2d 633, 273 App.Div. 1036.

Limitation on retroactive liability

(1) Statute providing that award of workmen's compensation payable by special fund on reopened claim shall not be retroactive for period of disability longer than two years immediately preceding date of filing application, establishes a time limitation on retroactive liability of special fund for temporary total disability, and limitation was not applicable to award based on permanent partial disability of left foot for which a schedule award was made.

N.Y.—Bellini v. Great Am. Indem. Co., 87 N.E.2d 426, 299 N.Y. 399, motion granted 91 N.E.2d 329, 300 N.Y. 679.

(2) Where evidence sustained finding that compensation case was last reopened on July 30, 1937, and award was not made until August 11, 1947, award payable from fund for reopened cases could not properly be made retroactive beyond July 30, 1935, two years before last reopening under 1940 amendment to workmen's compensation law limiting retroactive awards to a period of two years.

N.Y.—Russo v. Wielandt, 82 N.Y.S.2d 469, 274 App.Div. 275.

Deficiency compensation

Under the statute the fund is not liable for deficiency compensation, that is, a claim based on the contention that claimant's recovery against a third party is less than the amount he is entitled to under the compensation statute.

N.Y.—McCarthy v. H. J. Heinz Co., 156 N.Y.S.2d 931, 2 A.D.2d 908.

Change of law

The release accorded by statute to employer after lapse of three years from date of lump-sum payment, and transfer of subsequent liability to special fund, is not a privilege which can be recalled; the statute is not a statute of limitations which can be extended after running of three-year period, but confers property right on employer which cannot be taken away except on act of employer or due compensation made.

N.Y.—Tipton v. Lang's Bakery, 296 N.Y.S. 228, 250 App.Div. 696, affirmed 11 N.E.2d 759, 275 N.Y. 572.

Reimbursement where claim paid by employer

65. N.Y.—Pascucci v. William Kennedy Const. Co., 58 N.Y.S.2d 667, 270 App.Div. 83, appeal denied 59 N.Y.S.2d 905, 270 App.Div. 781.

Award against employer

(1) The reopening of a compensation case to consider benefits payable by the special fund does not constitute a reopening for the purpose of enlarging original carrier's liability.

N.Y.—Mazzei v. Frontier Bronze Corp., 142 N.Y.S.2d 42, 285 App.Div. 1194.

(2) Where compensation was awarded under stale claims statute, with directions that it be paid by self-insurer, and parties to appeal stipulated that sole question should be whether award should be paid out of special fund or by self-insurer, that claimant had made no application for compensation under such statute did not preclude industrial board from directing that award be paid by self-insurer.

N.Y.—Ryan v. American Bridge Co., 278 N.Y.S. 612, 243 App.Div. 496, affirmed 198 N.E. 375, 268 N.Y. 502.

Liability depends solely on passage of time

Postponement of operation

Where compensation claimant suffered hernia in course of employment but postponed correctional operation for thirteen months, such postponement at claimant's election did not convert the accident into an "occupational disease" and postpone the date of "accident", for purposes of limitations in statute imposing liability on fund for reopened cases, to date of disability due to the operation.

In silicosis and other dust disease cases, the date of the "injury" is the date the claimant became totally disabled.

Medical bills

(1) Award to compensation claimant for medical expenses, made compensation has been previously disallowed or otherwise disposed of without an award of compensation⁶⁷ or (2) where three years have elapsed since the last payment of compensation.⁶⁸ Where death resulting from the injury occurs after either of the foregoing time limitations, the award is to be paid by the fund.⁶⁹

The time is to be computed to the date of the application to reopen.⁷⁰ Where the statute is tolled, as in the case of a minor or incompetent for whom no guardian or committee has been appointed, the award is not to be paid from the special fund.⁷¹ However, it has been held that the statute is not one of limitation and that the time period is not tolled by minority in so far as the liability of the fund for reopened cases is concerned.⁷² The statutory time is tolled during the period of appeal from the prior award,⁷³ and during the period of the

than seven years after injury and more than three years after payment of compensation was completed, could not be made against employer and insurance carrier, but was payable out of special statutory funds. N.Y.—Wyski v. Brewer Dry Dock Co., 295 N.Y.S. 900, 251 App.Div. 769.

(2) A retroactive award under provision of workmen's compensation law for liability of special fund for reopened cases may include medical bills despite fact that no prior authority has been obtained for the incurring of the expense. N.Y.—Greenwald v. Electro Metallurgical Co., 134 N.Y.S.2d 451, 284 App. Div. 706.

(3) Retroactive award against special fund for reopened cases may include medical expenses incurred during the two-year period immediately preceding filing of application to reopen case, but such award may include only such expenses as could have been charged against employer in the first instance without specific authorization, and special fund may not be held liable for medical expenses for which employer could not have been held liable if claim had been made against employer within statutory time limits.

N.Y.—Marrameo v. Manhattan Coat Co., 153 N.Y.S.2d 848, 2 A.D.2d 102.

(4) Special fund for reopened cases was not liable for medical expenses incurred by claimant for a herniorrhaphy performed more than a month prior to application to reopen case filed more than seven years after industrial accident in nature of a right inguinal hernia and more than three years after last payment of compensation, where no emergency existed and such expenses were incurred without authorization from chairman of workmen's compensation board.

Abandoned application to reopen

Where claimant was awarded compensation for temporary disability on July 7, 1921, and on March 14, 1922, in response to his request for reopening of case, claimant was directed to file a report but he did nothing more about the matter until Oct. 7, 1938, when he submitted another application, the long lapse of time was conclusive evidence that application for reopening had been abandoned so as to preclude charging liability against employer and insurance carrier and so as to require payment of award from special fund. Neither employer nor insurer party to appeal

Where neither employer of injured compensation claimant nor employer's insurance carrier were parties to appeal by third person erroneously found to be employer, or were concerned with appeal, statutory period within which insurance carrier of employer could be held liable for award of workmen's compensation on reopened claim would not be diminished to prejudice of carrier and for benefit of special fund by time the appeal of person erroneously found to be employer was pending.

N.Y.—Bellini v. Great Am. Indem. Co., 87 N.E.2d 426, 299 N.Y. 399, motion granted 91 N.E.2d 329, 300 N.Y. 679.

claimant's military service,⁷⁴ and while claimant is within the jurisdiction of a country at war with the United States.⁷⁵

The special fund is not liable unless the case was previously closed, and is reopened by a new application.⁷⁶ Where the original claim for compensation is still open, the fund is not liable.⁷⁷ Where no prior application for compensation was made, the fund is not liable.⁷⁸

Payment of compensation within three years prior to the application for reopening prevents the imposition of liability on the fund,⁷⁹ although compensation was paid voluntarily and not under the direction of an award.⁸⁰ It has been held that for a payment by the employer to constitute a payment of compensation within the statute the payment must have been made voluntarily and with some knowledge of its effect.⁸¹ Payment of compensation after the filing of the application to reopen the case does not avoid the liability of the fund.⁸²

74. N.Y.—Sturesky v. Straussman, 78 N.Y.S.2d 633, 273 App.Div. 1036.

Right to claim that statute is tolled

(1) The right to claim that the statute is tolled by military service is personal to the claimant and may not be invoked to relieve or protect others.

N.Y.—Greenwald v. Electro Metallurgical Co., 134 N.Y.S.2d 451, 284 App.Div. 706—Schechter v. State Ins. Fund, 126 N.Y.S.2d 257, 283 App.Div. 19.

(2) Special fund for reopened cases was not entitled to benefit of statute tolling time limitation for bringing of suits by or against any person in military service in determining whether statutory time limit for holding employer liable for an award to former member of armed services in a reopened claim had elapsed.

N.Y.—Bellini v. Great Am. Indem. Co., 87 N.E.2d 426, 299 N.Y. 399, motion granted 91 N.E.2d 329, 300 N.Y. 679.

(3) Where liability is limited if the claim is upheld against the special fund but not if it is charged against the employer, the fact that claimant was in the military service may be invoked so as to toll the statute and impose liability on the employer rather than the fund.

N.Y.—Sturesky v. Straussman, 78 N.Y.S.2d 633, 273 App.Div. 1036.

(4) Under workmen's compensation law provision authorizing a retroactive award against special fund for reopened cases for bill incurred within two years prior to date of filing of application for reopening, incurrance of medical bills by employee one month prior to filing application did not constitute such "prejudice" as would entitle special fund to benefit of case law authorizing invocation of military law provision, for deduction of time spent in military service, to prevent shifting of liability from employer to special fund for reopened cases.

Claim in abeyance

For the purpose of application of statute relating to liability of fund for reopened cases, neither administrative distinction between a closed case and one in abeyance that the latter may be restored to active calendar by request of parties while an application to reopen the former is addressed to discretion of workmen's compensation board nor labels on files of board are determinative; and case is "closed" within meaning of statute when it has been referred to abeyance file because no further proceedings are foreseen.

N.Y.—Casey v. Hinkle Iron Works, 87 N.E.2d 419, 299 N.Y. 382.

Continuance

(1) Where more than seven years had elapsed since date of claimant's injury, but there had been numerous hearings before the workmen's compensation board, and case was marked continued at close of such hearings and had never been closed, employer and insurance carrier were not relieved from liability by provision of the compensation law that, after a lapse of seven years from date of injury and after claim has been disallowed or otherwise disposed of without award, an award, if made, shall be against the special fund for reopened cases.

N.Y.—Baker v. Crispell Bros., 87 N.Y.S.2d 193, 275 App.Div. 735.

(2) Where compensation claimant, although represented by an attorney, was himself absent and unable to attend proceedings for further award from special fund for partial disability, because of his service in army transport services, and claimant's attorney requested an award on basis of proof previously given, but employer and insurance carrier objected on ground that they wished to contest the matter further when claimant was present, and referee stated that case would be closed until claimant requested a hearing, workmen's compensation board properly held that there was no actual closing of case, but rather merely a direction that it be withheld from calendar until claimant was available.

While the statute has been amended to provide that neither medical treatment nor the supply of equipment shall constitute the payment of compensation,⁸³ it was previously held that the giving of medical treatment⁸⁴ or equipment⁸⁵ constituted the payment of compensation, so as to impose liability on the employer rather than the fund.

The test of whether or not wages paid the claimant constitute the payment of compensation is whether the employer paid for something which he did not get in the way of service.⁸⁶ Wages paid the employee while he is disabled and not working may be regarded as payment of compensation.⁸⁷ Payment of full wages for partial work with the knowledge of and in consideration of a compensable disability constitutes the payment of compensation within the statute.⁸⁸ The payment of sick benefits as required by the employer's contract with the union is not a payment of compensation within the statute.⁸⁹ Where a claimant is paid his full salary although given lighter work, such payment may be regarded as payment of compensation within the provision.⁹⁰ Similarly, payment of what is designated as a pension may be regarded as payment of compensation within the rule.⁹¹

Under the provision imposing liability on the fund for a reopened case where more than three years have elapsed since the last payment of compensation, the date of the last payment is the date when it was actually made, not the date when it should have been made,⁹² but in the case of a lump-sum or commuted payment, the date of the last payment of

Customary payment

Fact that employer paid employee, who remained home because of recurrence of back injury, a week's full salary in accordance with employer's established custom of paying one week's full salary to all employees absent because of disability, did not justify finding of workmen's compensation board that such payment constituted a payment of compensation by the employer within meaning of section of the workmen's compensation law excusing the special fund for reopened cases from responsibility where compensation payment has been made by employer within three years of reopening of claim.

Retirement allowance

Payment of annuity portion of retirement allowance by city to an employee who has previously been given a compensation award is not payment of "compensation" within meaning of provision of compensation law that, when an application for additional compensation is made after lapse of seven years from date of injury and three years from date of last payment of compensation, award shall be made against special fund.

A commuted award paid into the aggregate trust fund is essentially the same as a lump-sum payment and the date of the last payment by carrier is the same date on which the fund made the last payment, with respect to question whether a new award should be made against the fund for reopened cases on ground that more than three years have elapsed since last payment of compensation.

At the death of the employer an employee's claim for compensation under the workmen's compensation act should be presented to the employer's estate for audit and recognition as in any other case of a claim,⁹⁶ and where it is not presented until after the time for the presentation of claims has expired it is barred except as against a surplus remaining after settlement, or unless some estate not accounted for is discovered.⁹⁷

§ 839. Enforcement on Insolvency of Employer or Insurer

A claim for workmen's compensation may be entitled to a preference when the employer or his insurer is insolvent.

By some compensation acts, in case of the insolvency of the employer, the right to compensation and to the payments of compensation awarded is given a preference,⁹⁸ as, for example, that accorded to unpaid wage claims generally⁹⁹ or judgments rendered for claims for taxes.¹ A provision of settlement from employer as principal debtor, and other compensation creditors had no right in law or in equity to derive benefits for themselves from payments made by employer until widow's entire claim was paid in full.

Workmen's compensation act provides penalties to employer and insurer for violation of certain provisions of act, but state is not a guarantor of protection which act contemplates, and if an employer has not taken out compensation insurance and if he proves not to be financially responsible, law provides no civil recourse to employee other than his right of action against employer.

Tax claims; tax liens

Fact that judgment of industrial commission against employer was lien on all employer's realty in county in which judgment was docketed did not require that statute giving judgment of industrial commission against employer same preference against assets of employer as claims for taxes be construed to give judgments same priority as tax claims.

the bankruptcy act according workmen a priority for wages does not include a claim for workmen's compensation benefits,² but a claim for workmen's compensation may be accorded priority in bankruptcy proceedings under a provision of the bankruptcy law giving priority where it is provided by state law.³ Where it is provided that the award shall be paid to a special state fund where there is an industrial death, but no one entitled to claim compensation, such fund is entitled to the preference afforded state claims in enforcing such a claim.⁴

Assets transferred in fraud of creditors are subject to a claim for workmen's compensation.⁵

Receivership. Where a claimant obtains a compensation award against an insolvent employer he is entitled to present his claim to the receiver appointed for such employer,⁶ and, if the receiver refuses his claim, he can intervene by leave of the court appointing the receiver, and there procure an adjudication on its validity.⁷ By some compensation acts compensation awards are entitled to priority,⁸ subject to the claims of the United States⁹ and the expenses of the receivership proceeding.¹⁰ When a receiver is conducting the business of the original employer during insolvency, he is bound to continue payments of compensation.¹¹

§ 840. Priorities

A compensation award may have the same priority status with respect to the employer's assets as a claim for wages.

A compensation award is frequently accorded the same priority status with respect to the employer's assets as is a claim for wages.¹² Where a claim for workmen's compensation is accorded the same status as a claim for wages,¹³ such a claim does not have priority over a mortgage on the employer's property;¹⁴ and this rule has been applied as to a subsequent mortgage, taken in good faith for value without knowledge of the injury to the mortgagor's employee.¹⁵ A judgment in favor of the state fund and against the employer for insurance premiums is not entitled to priority over a prior mortgage on the employer's property.¹⁶

§ 841. Commutation of Award

Under statutes so providing, an award of compensation may be commuted, and the value thereof paid into a state fund. Commutation must be made in the manner provided by the statute.

After an award of compensation has been made it cannot be substantially changed without notice to the parties interested and an opportunity given them to be heard,¹⁷ and after such notice and opportunity to be heard, before a different method of payment can be fixed, the award previously made must either be vacated or modified.¹⁸ Except as the statute contains mandatory provisions for commutation of

to keep statute from being meaningless, since statute gave commission's judgments same preference that tax claims would have against personal property.

awards in specified classes of cases,¹⁹ a provision which authorizes the commission to permit or require a self-insurer to pay into the state fund an amount equal to the present value of an award together with an additional sum for payment of the expenses of administering the fund²⁰ does not compel the industrial board to commute awards.²¹ It may in its discretion commute them.²²

It is not the purpose of such provision to destroy the general scheme of the compensation act of establishing periodical payments and to permit the commission in every instance to commute periodical payments into a lump sum payment.²³ Rather it is the purpose to provide for particular and exceptional cases.²⁴ The exception must be in the interest of justice,²⁵ and should not depend on the whim or caprice of claimant or the employer,²⁶ or on an arbitrary ruling of the commission.²⁷ Each case should be considered by itself.²⁸ The commission is not justified in making a sweeping rule applying to all cases, or to all cases of a certain class.²⁹ It cannot require such a payment without first giving notice to the parties interested and holding a hearing,³⁰ and, after such notice and hearing, either vacating or modifying the award previously made,³¹ which cannot be done by a general resolution.³²

An agreement by the self-insurer as a condition to self-insurance to pay such an award when required does not require him to observe arbitrary and illegal orders of the commission to make such a payment,³³ nor is such an agreement enlarged by a subsequent change in the statute increasing the class of persons for whom awards may be commuted.³⁴ The computation of the amount of a commuted award must be made in accordance with the provisions of the act.³⁵ If the board or commission commutes at all, it has no discretion except to commute on the basis of the tables designated in the statute as the tables by which computations are to be made,³⁶ and where a commutation of an award computed on the basis of the tables designated in the statute would be unjust and oppressive in its result, it constitutes an abuse of discretion to do so.³⁷

Award to dependent parents of a deceased employee may be commuted to a lump sum, to be paid to them from the state fund into which the award has been paid by the insurance carrier.³⁸

Under a statute so providing, the commission may require commutation of awards to widows.³⁹ Where the award is made in accordance with the provisions of the law, its status is fixed at the time it was made;⁴⁰ and where granted to the widow of a deceased employee it is unaffected by her subsequent remarriage.⁴¹ A commuted award to a widow and children is a vested right which could not be rescinded or revised after the death of the widow.⁴² There can be no commutation of future payments of an award in favor of persons for whom the statute provides no appropriate table of averages for the ascertainment of probable dependency.⁴³

§ 842. Maturing Periodical Payments on Default

Under many statutes, it is provided in substance that where there is a default in complying with an award calling for periodic or installment payments, all of the payments shall become immediately due and payable.

Under many statutes, it is provided in substance that where there is a default in complying with an award calling for periodic or installment payments, all of the payments shall become immediately due and payable.⁴⁴ Under some statutes, the practice is for claimant to obtain an order finding that the employer or insurer is in default, and thereupon all future installments by operation of law become immediately due and payable.⁴⁵

The purpose of a provision authorizing suit for all unpaid compensation awarded on a failure to pay any part of the award is to secure prompt payment of the award,⁴⁶ and applies where the award calls for payments for an indefinite period of time.⁴⁷ A demand for payment of the installments past due

Objection to payment

State industrial board has power to order that value of compensation awarded deceased employee's dependent parents be paid them in lump sum by state insurance fund from aggregate trust fund, into which paid by insurance carrier, irrespective of objection to such procedure by insurance fund.

Liberal construction

Workmen's compensation act provision causing entire unpaid balance of entire workmen's compensation award to become due in a lump sum on expiration of two-week period following employee's written demand for compensation theretofore due and unpaid is not to be strictly construed on ground that it is penal in nature, but is remedial in character and intended to supplant existing remedies, and therefore must be liberally construed in favor of claimant with view of effecting purpose of act.

Dependents

Phrase, "said employee or other person entitled to said compensation may maintain an action," as used in workmen's compensation statute authorizing action for all unpaid compensation awarded on a failure to pay any part of award of compensation, means that action may be maintained by employee or his dependents who are entitled to compensation.

may be a condition precedent to the institution of suit to mature all of the payments.⁴⁸ The action may not be defended on the ground of error in the award.⁴⁹ The issuance of execution to collect the overdue installments is not a waiver of the right to sue to mature all of the payments.⁵⁰

In Louisiana the act provides that in the event the employer shall become insolvent or fail to pay six successive installments as they become due, the installments not yet payable under said judgment shall immediately become due and the judgment shall become executory for the whole amount, except where the employee or his dependent is adequately protected by insurance and receives payments thereunder.⁵¹ This statute provides something in the nature of a penalty or forfeiture⁵² and should be strictly construed.⁵³ The proviso that if the employee or his dependent is adequately protected by insurance and receives payments thereunder this right to have the judgment declared executory for the whole amount shall not accrue, has reference only to the case where the employer becomes insolvent and not to the case of a failure to pay six successive installments as they become due.⁵⁴ The provision for maturing future installments does not apply prior to judgment,⁵⁵ but is applicable to a preliminary or interlocutory compensation decree.⁵⁶ Its purpose is to visit a penalty on the employer who willfully refuses to pay.⁵⁷

ance of the payments will not be matured when the judgment on the authority of which payment was refused is reversed.⁵⁹ Under the statute an employee not adequately protected by insurance is entitled to a decree maturing all future payments where the employer repudiates the obligation by refusing to pay on demand, although the employee had waived his right to regular weekly payments and payments at the employer's office.⁶⁰ The statute does not apply to a judgment for compensation to be paid in weekly installments during the period of disability where in fact the disability has come to an end.⁶¹

In Texas, when payment of an award is not made within or at the end of the twenty days for giving notice of appeal, the employee or his beneficiary, in the absence of a bona fide appeal or justifiable cause, has a cause of action to mature all future installments on the award.⁶² The proceeding is designed to aid in the enforcement of compensation awards,⁶³ and is analogous to a suit on a judgment of a court of competent jurisdiction.⁶⁴ The employee need not demand payment prior to bringing suit.⁶⁵ It is mandatory on insurer to make the periodical payments in accordance with the award,⁶⁶ prompt payment is required,⁶⁷ and no days of grace beyond the twenty-day period are allowed.⁶⁸ Failure to comply with this obligation, to pay the amount due at once and to make the periodical payments promptly as they mature, constitutes prima facie a failure and refusal to abide by the award so as to entitle the employee to bring suit.⁶⁹

Where the default was justified, the payments will not be matured.⁷⁰ Mere neglect is not a showing of justifiable cause.⁷¹ Justifiable excuse for failure or refusal to comply with an award of the board is shown by an order of the board timely obtained, ending or diminishing the payments,⁷² and also, where claimant refuses to accept the compensation.⁷³ Where notice is duly given, and suit filed to set aside the award, a claimant's suit to mature the award is improper and should be stricken on exception;⁷⁴ and such a suit is properly dismissed where the petitioners could have asserted the same rights by cross petition on the insurance carrier's appeal from the award of the industrial board.⁷⁵

The suit is not precluded by the fact that the award is not for any definite amount or period of time or for total or permanent disability.⁷⁶ The effect of such a suit is to deprive the industrial accident board of further jurisdiction in the matter until the determination of the issues therein involved.⁷⁷ Claimant cannot sue to mature an award which the board had materially changed before suit was filed.⁷⁸

In such proceeding there can be no trial de novo so as in any way to vary or destroy the award.⁷⁹ The proceeding is collateral to the award.⁸⁰ No attack can be made on the award⁸¹ except to show

Termination of cause

To excuse a workmen's compensation insurer for its failure to comply with award of industrial accident board on ground of "justifiable cause," existence of such cause must have continued to date injured employee filed suit to collect alleged matured award.

Cause not shown

Fact that attorney for employee, who dismissed suit to set aside compensation award against a corporation which was a different and distinct party from insurance carrier, did not notify carrier of dismissal, did not raise issue of justifiable cause for carrier's refusal to comply with award subsequent to dismissal, where there was no agreement requiring attorney to notify carrier, attorneys for carrier defended dismissed suit, and carrier's refusal to comply with award after dismissal was based solely on dismissal.

Testimony of attorney for employee, who filed suit to set aside compensation award against a corporation which was a different and distinct party from insurance carrier, that if weekly installments awarded by industrial accident board had been tendered he would not have accepted them during pendency of suit, was sufficient to raise issue of justifiable cause for carrier's failure to comply with award during pendency of suit.

that the same was void for want of jurisdiction.⁸² Neither party may impeach any recital in the award⁸³ and the court is without power to review, set aside, or revise the award of the board, or otherwise take cognizance of the original controversy between the parties.⁸⁴ The court does, however, have power to render a judgment pursuant to agreement of the parties even though it may differ from the award.⁸⁵

The measure of relief to be given in the proceeding is fixed by the terms of the statute.⁸⁶ A successful plaintiff is entitled to a judgment maturing the entire claim so as to collect the full amount thereof, that is, the aggregate of the weekly or monthly payments, together with twelve per cent penalties and a reasonable attorney's fee for the prosecution and collection of the claim.⁸⁷ A discount on future installments matured by the judgment is not required.⁸⁸

The action may be filed in the county of claimant's or beneficiary's residence as well as in the county where the accident occurred,⁸⁹ and it is not essential to the statement of a cause of action that the petition contain the jurisdictional allegations as to venue.⁹⁰

§ 843. Action by State against Noncomplying Employer

Under some statutes, the award is enforced against a noncomplying employer by the state.

Under some statutes a suit is to be brought by the attorney general in the name of the state for the benefit of the state insurance fund against noncomplying employers on their failure to pay an award⁹¹ and employees of employers who have failed to comply with the workmen's compensation law, are protected and compensated by payment out of the surplus insurance fund.⁹² Where the employer pays the award, the action cannot be maintained by the state.⁹³

When the statute so provides the payment of a judgment against the employer entitles claimant to compensation,⁹⁴ but the recovery of a judgment against the employer is not necessary before claimant of the award becomes entitled to payment out of the surplus fund.⁹⁵ The nonpayment of the judgment or a certificate that the award cannot be collected may equally entitle claimant to compensation.⁹⁶ In the event the attorney general fails to certify that the award cannot be collected within the legal time limit, his failure does not deprive the injured workman of his just right to compensation.⁹⁷

The duty of determining who was the employer not complying with the workmen's compensation act rests on the state,⁹⁸ and if the state fails to collect premiums from, or fails to fix liability on, the real employer, such failure does not deprive the injured employee from obtaining his award from the surplus fund.⁹⁹

Under the rule in one jurisdiction, in the action by the attorney general, the employer is entitled to a trial by jury¹ and to challenge the correctness of the award in all respects save the amount of compensation.² The burden of proof as to all issues remains on the state throughout the case,³ but the introduction of the proceedings before the compensation board establishes a prima facie case and creates a rebuttable presumption of the facts therein found.⁴ As in ordinary civil cases, disputed questions of fact are to be submitted to the jury.⁵ Where a motion is made for a directed verdict at the conclusion of the state's case in its action against an employer to collect a compensation award, the testimony and all reasonable inferences therefrom must be given the most reasonable and favorable interpretation to the state.⁶

Under another view, while it must be proved that the employer and the employee were covered by the statute, and that an award has been made and paid,⁷ the merits of the award need not be proved and are not open to examination.⁸

§ 844. Action on Award

In some jurisdictions, an action may be maintained on a compensation award.

An employer not complying with a workman's compensation award may under some statutes be sued on the award in a proper court.⁹ Such an action has been held to be in derogation of the common law,¹⁰ and a special proceeding,¹¹ the statutory provisions being mandatory and exclusive,¹² and the rights and remedies to be enforced being statutory.¹³ Jurisdictional matters must be alleged and proved;¹⁴ there can be no presumption of ju-

Violation of safety requirements

Where industrial commission finds that employee's injury resulted from his employer's violation of specific safety requirement, and accordingly makes additional award against employer, commission has sole and exclusive right to determine whether failure to comply with such requirement caused injury of which employee complains, but question whether requirement is specific is one of law and not of fact alone, and if it is denied that there is specific requirement, this issue may properly be determined on appeal in action instituted by attorney general to recover additional award of commission.

Md.—Dyson v. Pen Mar Co., 73 A.2d 4, 195 Md. 107.

Provision for execution

Under statute providing that if no appeal from a compensation award is taken it shall be final and may be enforced in same manner as a judgment of superior court, and authorizing superior court to issue execution on any uncontested or final award of a commissioner in same manner as in cases of judgments rendered in that court, issuance of execution is not an exclusive method of enforcement, but resort may be had to the ordinary action on a judgment.
Conn.—McIntyre v. Standard Oil Co. of New York, 12 A.2d 544, 126 Conn. 491.

Minor procedural defects

Fact that employee's petition for order to show cause, in summary proceeding to enforce claim for workmen's compensation against insurer, was signed by attorney rather than by employee and that affidavit was served on insurer improperly, would not defeat recovery where insurer's substantial rights were not injured by such deviations.

Before suit can be instituted there must be a final award,¹⁶ which must be active and vital,¹⁷ and not suspended as by an appeal or suit to set it aside.¹⁸ The right to sue matures on the failure or refusal of the employer to pay the compensation awarded when due.¹⁹ The proceeding must be instituted within the time limited.²⁰ The running of limitations on the time to institute suit is suspended during the period of an injunction proceeding directed at the enforcement of the award.²¹

Claimant is entitled to recover the amount allowed in the award.²² His recovery, however, must be according to the terms of the award,²³ and where the award allows weekly sums he is not entitled to judgment for the total amount of all the weekly payments in a lump sum, but only for the aggregate weekly stipend to the date of trial,²⁴ and as to the remaining weeks for which he is entitled to recover, judgment should be rendered for such amounts payable weekly.²⁵ Only one cause of action is stated in an action on a compensation award although the award itself is made up of different items of award.²⁶ The failure of a statute making provision for the filing of an award in a designated court and the entering of judgment thereon to provide for an "award unappealed from" in cases in which the accident occurred outside the state does not prevent its enforcement;²⁷ it may be enforced in an ordinary action at law.²⁸

Parties. Both the employer and his insurer are proper parties to a proceeding to enforce the award.²⁹

Venue. Venue provisions with respect to actions on awards for workmen's compensation are mandatory and jurisdictional³⁰ and no court, although otherwise competent, has jurisdiction except one within the territorial limits designated by the statute.³¹ An action to enforce a compensation award may be brought in the county where claimant resides and not in the county where the accident occurred.³²

Defenses. In some jurisdictions in an action by the compensation commission to recover the amount of the award made by it the only question to be considered by the trial court in the absence of fraud is whether or not the commission had jurisdiction in the premises.³³ However, the jurisdiction of the compensation board to make the award is open to consideration,³⁴ as is the question of limitations.³⁵ Where the action is on an award against a noncomplying employer, he may assert as a defense to the action any fact tending to show that the alleged injuries were not subject to the act and hence not within the compensation bureau's jurisdiction.³⁶

Contempt proceedings

In proceedings on petition under workmen's compensation act to have employer adjudged in contempt for willful failure or neglect to obey provisions of decree awarding employee compensation for partial incapacity, it was no part of duty of court, and it was without authority to revise and correct an alleged error in decree which petition sought to enforce.

Where it is sought to enforce the award against insurer, the question of whether or not the award is within the coverage of the policy is open for consideration,³⁷ unless insurer was a party to the proceedings which culminated in the award.³⁸ Pleas of accord and satisfaction and res judicata in a suit to enforce an award of the industrial accident board are properly sustained, when the record discloses full payment of the amount awarded in a lump sum.³⁹

Demurrer. Where the complaint states a good cause of action a demurrer thereto will be overruled.⁴⁰ As is the case generally, a demurrer to a pleading admits the facts stated therein,⁴¹ and where claimant contends that the factual issues raised by defendant's pleading are for the determination of the compensation commission, such contention cannot be presented by way of a demurrer.⁴²

Evidence. In an action on a workmen's compensation award, evidence as to defendant's liability under the act is irrelevant.⁴³

Questions of law and fact. In an action to recover compensation awarded by the commission under the compensation act, the determination of facts alleged to deprive the commission of jurisdiction in the matter is for the jury,⁴⁴ as is also the determination of the question of whether the injury to the employee was sustained outside the scope of his employment⁴⁵ or was caused by a willful intention of the employee to injure himself or another.⁴⁶ Where, under the workmen's compensation act, the board makes findings, conclusions, and an award based thereon, and finds that the employer did not have its employees insured although the undisputed facts show that a policy had been issued and not canceled in accordance with its terms, the question of whether the employer has insurance is one of law.⁴⁷

Merger of award in judgment. An award under the workmen's compensation act when filed in a court and judgment entered thereon loses its actionable character as a claim or award as it becomes merged in the judgment.⁴⁸ Thereafter there can be no action based on the award⁴⁹ nor can the award be paid, as it no longer exists.⁵⁰ Satisfaction can only be had by payment of the judgment⁵¹ and an action to recover the amount of the award must be on the judgment and not on the award.⁵²

Action by employer against insurer. In an action by the employer against insurer to enforce an award by the industrial accident board to the employer as reimbursement for payments made by the employer for hospital, medical, and nurses expenses for the injured employee, the court may grant judgment for the amount of the award together with a penalty and attorney's fees.⁵³ Where the board, in its award of compensation to claimant, provides for the payment out of the compensation awarded of expenses incurred by the employer, the employer has no cause of action for such expenses where an appeal from the award to claimant is pending, even though the employer was not joined in the appeal.⁵⁴ The employer may review, by certiorari, a judgment enforcing an award against him, but relieving insurer of liability.⁵⁵

§ 845. Judgment on Award

In some jurisdictions, provision is made for the entry of a judgment on a compensation award.

In some jurisdictions provision is made by the workmen's compensation act therein for a transmission of an award of the board for compensation and all papers in connection therewith to a designated court which is required to render a judgment in accordance therewith.⁵⁶ Ordinarily, such provisions apply to awards of the commission which have been previously affirmed on appeal, final awards of the commission which have not been appealed from, and agreements between the parties which have been approved by the commission.⁵⁷ In some jurisdictions if the compensation is insured no judgment can be rendered or execution issued thereon except upon application to the court and for good cause shown.⁵⁸ A proceeding for judgment under these provisions resembles a motion under the statute on a forthcoming or delivery bond.⁵⁹ It is not a separate suit, but merely a continuation of the proceeding instituted before the commission,⁶⁰ and constitutes merely a method adopted for the enforcement of such awards, in lieu of machinery of enforcement which might have been provided for and given to the commission itself, to exercise through executive officers appointed for that purpose,⁶¹ that is, by execution of fieri facias or any other appropriate process for enforcing a judgment.⁶² There is neither necessity nor reason for such a proceeding unless the employer or his insurer fail to pay the amounts awarded claimants.⁶³ A judgment on an award of the compensation board is a judgment for compensation, not a judgment for damages.⁶⁴

Statutes authorizing such procedure have been held mandatory,⁶⁵ and it has been said that the court has no discretion in the matter,⁶⁶ that in entering judgment on the award it exercises a ministerial function,⁶⁷ and, if it refuses to render the judgment required, can be compelled to do so by mandamus.⁶⁸ However there is authority which holds that the rendition of a judgment on an award is not a perfunctory duty or an empty formality, but is a judicial act.⁶⁹ Thus, although on the filing of a certified copy of the award, the court should cause it to be spread of record⁷⁰ and then enter a judgment thereon,⁷¹ the entry of judgment must necessarily be predicated on jurisdiction of the subject matter and the parties,⁷² which jurisdiction is not presumed.⁷³ The record must show on its face that the case is one in which the court has authority to act.⁷⁴ However, if the award is void for any reason not appearing on its face the question can and must be raised when claimant undertakes to enforce the judgment.⁷⁵ A mistake in venue by the commission will not prevent entry of judgment on the award.⁷⁶ Although the act may require only the presentation to the superior court of certified copies of an order or decision of the industrial accident board, it is not improper that a petition be filed setting forth briefly the nature of the questions to be decided.⁷⁷

Notice. In the absence of statutory provision directing otherwise, notice is not required of the filing and docketing of the award in the particular court.⁷⁸ On the other hand, it has been held that for a judgment enforcing an award of compensation to be immune from attack, the employer must be notified of the application for judgment and be given an opportunity to defend.⁷⁹

Time for entering judgment. It is not required that judgment on the award be entered within the time limit provided for the right to review the action of the commission in making the award.⁸⁰

Judgment roll. The certified copy of the findings and award and a copy of the judgment constitute the judgment roll.⁸¹

What constitutes judgment. The rendition of a judgment by the court in accordance with the award,

or its refusal to enter such confirmation because no jurisdiction appears to sustain the award, is, in either event, a judgment.⁸²

Matters open for consideration on application. No general jurisdiction is given the court to determine any question of fact or law necessary to support the award as rendered by the board or commission in the first instance;⁸³ at the time application is made to enter judgment on the record the rights of claimant have been established.⁸⁴ The court must render judgment in accordance with the award;⁸⁵ it has no power to change the award,⁸⁶ it cannot review, or reverse or modify the award,⁸⁷ or construe the statute.⁸⁸ In rendering judgment thereon the court can construe the award.⁸⁹ An employee seeking judgment on an award may attack a receipt reciting that he had received the total amount of the award.⁹⁰

Parties. Claimant is entitled to judgment against the employer, even though insurer is solvent.⁹¹ The court must determine whether applicant to have judgment entered on the award is a proper party.⁹² Under some acts the person in whose favor judgment on the award is entered may be different from the one named in the award.⁹³ The court does not, however, have authority or power to enter judgment against one not named in the award.⁹⁴ On motion for judgment on the award, the legal status of the adverse party cannot be questioned.⁹⁵

Requisites and sufficiency. The court in rendering judgment on an award of the board must accept the final award of the board as its finding.⁹⁶ The judgment of the court must be entered in accordance with the award,⁹⁷ which means that it should recite⁹⁸ and follow⁹⁹ the award, and should render such a decree as the law requires on the facts in the record as found by the board.¹ The court must admit testimony showing payments made on the award,² and should enter judgment in accordance with the award and the facts existing as to defaults in payment.³ It is not contemplated that a series of judgments be entered on an award, although a series of executions may be required to enforce payment of the judgment.⁴ It is unnecessary, where the statute confers such authority, for the court in its judgment expressly to retain jurisdiction to enforce the judgment and in accordance with the statute.⁵

Review of, and opening, vacating, or correcting judgment. A judgment rendered on an award has the same effect as though rendered in a suit duly heard and determined by the court.⁶ It is not subject to collateral attack⁷ unless the record affirmatively shows want of jurisdiction, and every fact not negated by the record is presumed in support of the judgment.⁸ Under the practice in some jurisdictions, no appeal lies from a judgment on an award where no appeal lies from the award.⁹ A party, however, is not prevented from protesting or correcting the judgment.¹⁰

A motion to vacate a judgment entered on an award is addressed to the sound legal discretion of the court.¹¹ The court may, after the term has passed, set aside a judgment entered in conformity with the form provided by a repealed statute and enter the judgment in conformity with the provisions of the statute in force.¹² The court may open up a judgment at the employer's request where the matter was defended by the employer's insurer, who has become insolvent.¹³

§ 846. Executions

Ordinarily, a compensation award cannot be enforced by execution until judgment is entered thereon.

Ordinarily, an award for compensation under the workmen's compensation act, or an agreement for compensation thereunder, is not enforceable by execution or other process until judgment is entered thereon in the proper court.¹⁴ However, after the award has been filed in the proper court and given the force and effect of a judgment therein, it is enforceable by execution,¹⁵ and supplementary pronership even though he was not a partner in this particular operation, and therefore trial court erred in denying employee's motion for judgment against appellee partner. Ky.—Angel v. Brown, 230 S.W.2d 623, 313 Ky. 135.

ceedings in aid of execution may be resorted to as in other cases.¹⁶ A judgment for compensation entered by the proper court on appeal from an award of the board or commission or in an action to enforce an award may be enforced by execution.¹⁷ The execution on a judgment entered on an award of a compensation commission, although in the form of an execution on a judgment of the court, is in reality an execution on the award of the commission.¹⁸ A judgment in an action on award for compensation which provides for future weekly payments of the weekly installments of the award not due at the time of the trial may provide that, if such payments are not paid, then due execution therefor shall issue.¹⁹ On failure to comply with the original order for compensation, the court may order that the entire amount of compensation shall become due immediately, and that, on proof of such failure, execution may issue for the entire amount of the award.²⁰

Under some compensation acts, however, where the decision of an arbitrator in a workmen's compensation proceeding is a final decision, equivalent to a judgment, it may be enforced by the issuance of an execution.²¹ A provision for the issuance of execution on an award may be limited to cases where the employer has failed to comply with the financial security provisions of the statute.²² Under some statutes, the security provided by the statute for the payment of the claims is exclusive and execution does not lie for the collection of such a claim.²³ Where a claim against partners individually has been dismissed and the award entered against the partnership, the individual assets of the partners may be reached to satisfy the award after an execution against the partnership property has been returned unsatisfied.²⁴

Notice. In the absence of statutory provision directing otherwise, notice is not required of the issuance of execution on the judgment.²⁵

Time for issuance. The execution must be issued within the statutory period therefor.²⁶ Within the meaning of a statute limiting the time after final judgment within which an execution may be levied, an award in compensation proceedings becomes a final judgment only at the end of the compensation period;²⁷ or when so modified as to fix a definite sum of money as due from the debtor and presently payable,²⁸ as though the award be commuted to a specific sum so payable.²⁹ Under such provision claimant may have execution any time within the compensation period to recover such of the payments as have matured and thereafter within the period allowed after final judgment for an execution to issue.³⁰

Effect of execution on right of action. The execution of a judgment for a part of the compensation originally claimed is not an acquiescence in the judgment rejecting the balance of the sum sued for.³¹

Stay of execution. A stay of execution may be granted for good cause,³² as for example, to require claimant to credit the judgment with amounts already received.³³ Under some compensation acts the commission or any member thereof may stay the execution of any judgment entered on an award of the commission on good cause appearing therefor and on such terms and conditions as may be imposed, a certified copy of such order to be filed with the clerk entering judgment.³⁴ Under such a provision, when a stay has been ordered by the commission or by one of its members, no judge of the court in which the judgment was rendered has authority to interfere with the operation of the order so made,³⁵ and, in the absence of a stay order by the commission or one of its members, the court is without jurisdiction to suspend or delay the execution of a judgment entered in the records of such court following on, and in accordance with, an award of the commission.³⁶ The court in threatening to proceed to the hearing and determination of a motion to recall and quash an execution on such a judgment exceeds its jurisdiction, in that it assumes authority to suspend the operation or execution of the judgment or of the award;³⁷ the authority to make such order is vested in the commission or some one of its members,³⁸ and in no other tribunal.³⁹

Who may apply for stay of execution. The commission cannot take cognizance of an application for an order staying execution on a judgment entered on its award brought by one who had not joined in any proceedings before it nor had questioned the validity of its award prior to final adjudication and affirmance by the upper courts.⁴⁰

§ 847. Interest

Under some authorities, compensation payments bear interest from the date they should be paid; under others, interest does not start running until there is an award, and under still other authorities, interest does not start running until a judgment is entered.

Change in rule

Where rule requiring motions for award of five per cent damages on appeal or for correction of any judgment to be filed within sixty days from entry of final judgment was adopted in December, 1952, but rule was not distributed to members of bar until February, 1953, motion to correct final judgment entered March 9, 1953, in workmen's compensation proceeding, so as to allow interest of six per cent per annum on each payment of compensation from its due date and five per cent statutory damages on all payments due at time cause was affirmed would be allowed, although motion was not filed until June 1, 1953.

stances specified.⁴³ Thus, under a compensation act authorizing the allowance of interest where payments of compensation have been unreasonably delayed, an order allowing interest where there was no unreasonable delay in payment of workmen's compensation is unauthorized.⁴⁴ Under some statutes, the imposition of interest on delayed payments rests in the discretion of the compensation board.⁴⁵

While it has been held that where the compensation act does not provide for interest, none can be allowed,⁴⁶ it is generally held that in the absence of a provision governing the matter in the compensation statute, general rules and statutes dealing with interest apply as to the allowance of interest in compensation cases.⁴⁷ Where the compensation act has no provision with respect to interest at the time the claim for compensation accrues, the general interest statute applies notwithstanding the subsequent amendment of the compensation act to contain a provision as to interest.⁴⁸

Under some compensation acts and general statutes, interest is allowed on each compensation payment from the date when it is due⁴⁹ even though

Interest

(1) Where no appeal was taken from referee's decision that employer should have continued compensation payments, employee was entitled to interest on payments as a matter of right, and interest was no defense to right to interest.

Minn.—Bourdeaux v. Gilbert Motor Co., 20 N.W.2d 393, 220 Minn. 538.

(2) Claimant, who permitted his claim for workmen's compensation to be barred for two years, was not entitled to interest on award when finally made, for such period. Pa.—Angelo v. Keystone State Const. Co., 3 A.2d 946, 134 Pa.Super. 255.

Definite or liquidated sum

Installment of workman's compensation which is definite or liquidated sum of money due on certain date bears interest from that date if it is not timely paid by employer.

Pa.—Kessler v. North Side Packing Co., 186 A. 404, 122 Pa.Super. 566.

Increase in award

Where claimant employee had originally been found to be twenty per cent permanently partially disabled and on review and reopening matter it was determined that because of aggravated conditions not taken into account on original proceeding employee was twenty-five per cent permanently partially disabled, in granting twenty additional weeks compensation employee was entitled to interest thereon only from date when commissioner found her to be entitled to increased compensation.

Iowa.—Bousfield v. Sisters of Mercy, 86 N.W.2d 109.

Judicial demand

(1) An award of compensation for total permanent disability resulting from injuries to employee in course of employment should be for period not exceeding four hundred weeks, less credit for weekly payments made, and interest awarded should be from delinquency date of each weekly installment, not from judicial demand.

La.—Deshotels v. Highway Ins. Underwriters, App., 40 So.2d 750.

(2) In view of fact that grandchildren are not conclusively presumed to be dependents under workmen's compensation act, and in view of fact that mother of grandchildren did not qualify as natural tutrix of grandchildren until a few days prior to filing of suit for compensation benefits for death of grandfather, interest allowed on judgment should run from date of judicial demand.

La.—Dorce v. Calcasieu Paper Co., App., 35 So.2d 559.

Where compensation settlement with legal widow had no legal effect, because widow was not living with, or dependent on, deceased employee, settlement did not protect employer against payment of legal interest on each weekly compensation payment to minor entitled to compensation as a member of deceased employee's household, and such interest was due from time on which each weekly payment was due.

Installments due prior to award

Interest on unpaid installments of workmen's compensation begins to run only from date of award and not from due date of each installment previous to date of award.

Where judgment is entered on an award, interest runs from the date of the judgment or the date the judgment directs payment.⁵⁸ Where the judgment is not for a sum of money, but merely an adjudication that claimant is entitled to compensation, the judgment does not carry interest.⁵⁹ Where the judgment in favor of claimant runs against the state compensation agency, interest has been denied on the ground that the judgment is one against the state.⁶⁰

The employer is not liable for interest during the period prior to the time he is in default.⁶¹ It has been held that the employer may not be required to pay interest on installments of compensation withheld pending an appeal,⁶² at least where the appeal is by claimant;⁶³ but the more usual view is that compensation payments deferred by reason of an appeal bear interest.⁶⁴

Where the compensation commission directs payment of a commuted sum, and provides that it be deposited with a trustee and paid to the beneficiary in installments, the beneficiary is entitled to whatever interest the fund earns and not to a fixed rate.⁶⁵

Lack of knowledge by employer

An injured employee's claim for interest on total amount of unpaid weekly installments of compensation awarded under workmen's compensation act from time of docketing judgment on award cannot be defeated by employer on ground that he had no knowledge of award or steps taken to enforce judgment until sheriff levied execution on monies due employer from county, as employer was obliged to take cognizance of such steps.

N.J.—Simon v. New Jersey Asphalt & Paving Co., 8 A.2d 256, 123 N.J. Law 232.

Damages for delay

Where judgment entered on an award of industrial board ordered payment of definite amounts at fixed times, on failure to make such payments when due, interest on deferred installments might be allowed by way of damages for delay.

Ind.—Hatfield v. Higgins, 31 N.E.2d 650, 108 Ind.App. 681.

Issuance of execution

An injured employee, awarded compensation payable in weekly installments under workmen's compensation act, is entitled to interest on each unpaid installment after docketing of judgment on award from time each payment became due, although he did not issue execution each week or procure order that entire amount awarded should become due immediately because of employer's noncompliance with original order, as such failures merely injured to employer's benefit.

Failure to file reports or evidence

(1) A provision that compensation awards against an employer shall be increased by a certain percentage where employer has failed to file certain reports and furnish certain evidence is penal and will be strictly construed.

Ga.—Dunn v. American Mut. Liability Ins. Co., 13 S.E.2d 902, 64 Ga. App. 509.

(2) Such provision does not authorize an increase in the compensation award because of a refusal or willful neglect to pay an award.

Ga.—Duan v. American Mut. Liability Ins. Co., supra.

(3) Commission did not abuse its discretion in failing to assess penalties for failure of employer to file report of claimant's injury or in failing to allow certain medical benefits.

posed under some statutes where the employer or insurer liable for compensation interposes a defense which is merely frivolous or for purposes of delay.⁶⁸ Provision is sometimes made for the addition of a percentage to an award affirmed on appeal.⁶⁹ Under another statute, a penalty is provided where the employer makes a lump sum settlement without the approval of the court or at a discount greater than permitted by the statute.⁷⁰

Failure to carry insurance

Under statute requiring employer to pay fifty per cent additional compensation as a penalty for failure to carry insurance, liability is not determined by good faith or willful neglect, and only question is whether employer has insurance and if he has none, liability for additional compensation necessarily follows.

Colo.—Anderson v. Dutch Maid Bakeries, 102 P.2d 740, 106 Colo. 201.

Employment of minor

Where sixteen-year-old claimant was employed by tenant to help harvest beets to be delivered to landlord canning factory, no employment certificate was necessary for claimant, and landlord canning factory would therefore not be liable for double compensation for failure to obtain certificate even though claimant was an employee of factory.

N.Y.—Pestlin v. Haxton Canning Co., 80 N.Y.S.2d 869, 274 App.Div. 144, affirmed 87 N.E.2d 522, 299 N.Y. 477.

Noncompliance with safety rules

An employer's guarding of front of paper converting machine, where processed paper emerged from feed rolls, was not compliance with industrial commission's order that horizontal feed rolls be enclosed by cover over front, so that employee, injured when he reached into machine to thread broken paper through unguarded front rolls, was properly awarded fifteen per cent penalty by commission.

Wis.—Marinette Paper Co. v. Industrial Commission, 27 N.W.2d 722, 251 Wis. 60.

Failure to comply with temporary award

(1) Section of workmen's compensation act providing that amount of temporary or partial award, if not complied with, may be doubled in final award, is permissive and not mandatory and vests a discretion in industrial commission, with exercise of which reviewing court should not interfere unless it clearly appears that action of commission was arbitrary and constituted abuse of discretion.

Mo.—Powers v. Universal Atlas Cement Co., App., 261 S.W.2d 512.

(2) Under statute providing that if a compensation award is not complied with, amount thereof may be doubled in final award, commission's authority to inflict such penalty is not limited to situation in which employer's defense is found to be frivolous or vexatious, but if employer elects to refuse compliance with temporary award, he is assuming a calculated risk of being subjected to penalty in event final award is in accordance with temporary award.

Mo.—Cebak v. John Nooter Boiler Works Co., App., 258 S.W.2d 262.

(3) Where employer admittedly paid no part of compensation allowed in temporary awards to employee, compensation for periods involved would be doubled in final award in accordance with statute.

Mo.—Cebak v. John Nooter Boiler Works Co., supra.

Attorney's fees

Penalty provisions of insurance code apply to all forms of insurance, including workmen's compensation insurance, and are applicable notwithstanding workmen's compensation act provisions as to matter of attorney's fee.

La.—Cain v. Employers Cas. Co., App., 96 So.2d 527.

Hearing

Under rules of practice before industrial commission, demand for formal hearing may be made by either employee or employer; and employee complying substantially with commission's rules was entitled to hearing and determination before referee on his petition for imposition of penalty.

Minn.—Springborg v. Willson & Co., 73 N.W.2d 433, 245 Minn. 489.

Statute making general rules applicable

Language of 1950 Amendment of Workmen's Compensation Act, placing awards of compensation made by judgment of circuit court in same category as other judgments of circuit court, and providing that, on affirmance thereof, such judgments shall bear same interest and penalties as do other judgments of circuit court, is plain and unambiguous and cannot be interpreted as placing such judgments awarding compensation in a more favored or different class than other judgments of circuit court.

Miss.—M. T. Reed Const. Co. v. Martin, 63 So.2d 528, 215 Miss. 472.

Costs

In workmen's compensation proceeding in which claimant was entitled to compensation assessment of costs against state compensation insurance fund and industrial commission and requirement that state compensation fund pay such cost was not error.

Certiorari

Judgment of circuit court was affirmed by supreme court, inclusion in judgment of affirmance of amount of ten per cent damages was not error on ground that statute providing for such award applied only to cases which came before supreme court by appeal.

Ala.—Goodyear Tire & Rubber Co. of Ala. v. Downey, 96 So.2d 278, 266 Ala. 344.

Reinstatement of award

Under statute providing that where judgment or decree is affirmed, court shall allow damages of five per cent and costs against appellant, no such damages could be awarded where reviewing court reversed denial of compensation of trial court and reinstated commission order.

Miss.—Russell v. Southeastern Utilities Service Co., 92 So.2d 877.

Award for funeral expenses

Where statute on which attorney-referee based his award in death benefits case did not definitely fix amount of funeral expenses, his award of funeral expenses, which was affirmed by full commission, was not a judgment for a "sum of money" and, on judicial affirmance of award, beneficiaries were not entitled to recover statutory damages and interests on funeral expense award.

In considering a petition to impose the penalty the commission may refer to its own records in the case without their introduction in evidence,⁷¹ but it is not error to introduce them in evidence.⁷² Pleadings for the recovery of such penalty will be strictly construed, and no intendment or inference will be indulged to supply omissions or to cure deficiencies.⁷³

In a number of jurisdictions the compensation acts provide for penalties in case of vexatious or unreasonable delay in the payment of the compensation awarded;⁷⁴ the proceedings therefor being maintained before the compensation commission⁷⁵ or a court.⁷⁶ Ordinarily, the penalty cannot be obtained unless an award has been made,⁷⁷ and then only after the award has become final either by confirmation on review or the lapse of time for review without such being sought;⁷⁸ but under some statutes, a penalty may be imposed for delay in paying an award even though proceedings for its review are pending where the enforcement of the award has not been stayed.⁷⁹

An installment of compensation cannot become delinquent until it becomes due, which cannot be until there is some reasonable certainty as to the amount and number of payments to be made.⁸⁰ Thus, the compensation for an injury to an employee does not become due, in the sense that it carries the statutory penalties for nonpayment, until the obligation of the employer is definitely ascertained or settled in the exercise of proper diligence on his part, where there is a reasonable controversy as to his liability.⁸¹ Where, however, the controversy is over only a portion of the compensation, the employer or insurer, in order to be relieved of the La.—Craig v. Compressed Industrial Gases, App., 7 So.2d 197.

(2) Where compromise settlement of compensation claim was entered into in good faith and all parties were in error as to claimant's true condition of total permanent disability, claimant thinking that he had fully recovered from the compensable injury, trial court properly refused to allow penalties against employer.

La.—Scott v. Caddo Parish School Board, App., 12 So.2d 823.

(3) Good faith agreement to settle compensation claim for lump sum computed on basis of sixty-five per cent of weekly wage for one hundred weeks in reliance on physician's opinion was an attempt at compromise and not a "lump-sum settlement" at unauthorized rate of discount so as to entitle claimant to statutory penalty.

penalty as to the portion obviously due, must pay or tender to the employee that amount.⁸²

What constitutes vexatious or unreasonable delay in paying the award is a question of fact,⁸³ to be determined under the circumstances of the particular case;⁸⁴ and, where all legal proceedings have been exhausted and a considerable time has been permitted to elapse thereafter during which the award is not paid, such delay is ordinarily considered unreasonable.⁸⁵ However, under some statutes, the penalty accrues on the failure to pay the award within a stated time after it becomes due.⁸⁶

Under some acts payment of the penalty will not be enforced where there was justifiable cause for the delay or refusal to pay.⁸⁷ Delay during the pendency of a judicial proceeding brought and prosecuted in good faith for the purpose of obtaining a vacation or modification of an award of compensation,⁸⁸ or delay caused by uncertainty in the award which necessitated a conference with the commission's referee,⁸⁹ will not authorize the imposition of the penalty. However, when the appeal taken is not based on such a reasonable controversy as would justify an appeal, the penalty should be imposed.⁹⁰

Under some statutes, an insurer failing to pay a claim within the statutory time after proof of loss is subject to a penalty where such failure is arbitrary, capricious, or without probable cause.⁹¹

Contra

Wright v. National Sur. Corp., App., 52 So.2d 597.

Estoppel

A workmen's compensation insurer, recognizing injured employee's right to compensation for total permanent disability by paying him compensation therefor for over a year, cannot deny that he furnished satisfactory proof of loss, as required by statute to recover penalty for insurer's arbitrary or capricious failure to make further compensation payments within sixty days after receipt of such proof.

La.—Daigle v. Great Am. Indem. Co., App., 70 So.2d 697.

Proof of loss

(1) Term "proof of loss" in provision of workmen's compensation act, subjecting compensation insurer to penalty for arbitrary or capricious failure to pay compensation due within sixty days after receipt of satisfactory proof of loss from injured employee, means satisfactory proof of employee's right to come under such act and of accident, injury, and resulting disability or loss of ability to perform same work as, or work similar to, that in which he was engaged at time of accident, and any monetary loss, that is, loss or decrease in wages, is incidental and result of such loss of ability.

La.—Daigle v. Great Am. Indem. Co., supra.

(2) An injured employee, furnishing workmen's compensation insurer satisfactory proof of loss, after which insurer paid him weekly compensation for total permanent disability for over a year, was not required to furnish another proof of loss after insurer's discontinuance of such payments and wait sixty days before filing suit for further compensation in order to recover statutory penalty for insurer's arbitrary and capricious refusal to continue payments.

La.—Daigle v. Great Am. Indem. Co., supra.

Payments by another employer

Continued wage payments to a workmen's compensation claimant, after her injury, by another employer, would not excuse insurer of claimant's employer at time of her injury from withholding payment of weekly compensation or absolve it from liability for penalties and attorney's fees imposed for arbitrary and capricious failure to pay compensation due a disabled employee.

La.—Guillory v. Coal Operators Cas. Co., App., 95 So.2d 201.

Payments delinquent at time of judgment

Penalties provided by statute for insurer's arbitrary and capricious failure to pay claims can be assessed only against payments delinquent at time of judgment, and cannot be based upon an entire workmen's compensation award.

XXI. INCREASE, DIMINUTION, TERMINATION, OR REINSTATEMENT OF COMPENSATION

A. AWARDS GENERALLY

1. ADJUSTMENT OR TERMINATION OF COMPENSATION

§ 849. In General

Provisions for the adjustment, termination, or suspension of compensation by the tribunal concerned, acting on application of a party in interest, may operate to create a right in addition to, and not dependent on, the right of appeal; and in so far as such provisions operate to give a workman a right to receive further compensation, the right conferred is substantial. Generally speaking, power to review a compensation award or judgment cannot be conferred by agreement, waiver, or conduct.

The rules governing modification, amendment, correction, opening and vacating awards and judgments in compensation proceedings have already been discussed in general terms supra §§ 649-653. The discussion herein deals with the modification, amendment, opening or vacating awards or judgments with the view to increasing, diminishing, terminating or suspending compensation.

The compensation acts commonly contain provisions, as discussed infra § 850, for the adjustment, termination, or suspension of compensation, either by the tribunal concerned acting on its own motion or on application of a party in interest. Such provisions presuppose an agreement or award,⁹⁶ or, at least, a benefit furnished under the compensation act by a voluntary act of the employer.⁹⁷ They may operate to create in a party a right in addition to, and not dependent on, the right of appeal.⁹⁸ In so far as such provisions operate to give a workman a right to receive further compensation, the right conferred is substantial,⁹⁹ of the same dignity as his right to receive compensation in the first instance,¹ and one of which he cannot be deprived.²

The power to review a compensation award or judgment is wholly statutory, as discussed infra § 850, and cannot be conferred by agreement, waiver, or conduct.³ However, it has been held that the right, if any, to object to the exercise of the power of the commission in reopening a case, taking further testimony, involving questions of law not previously considered, in a hearing de novo, and in making a second award, involves merely questions of remedy or procedure and may be waived;⁴ and that an employer is bound by an agreement stopping compensation and providing that if future disability develops or if the employee is unable to continue at his work because of disability due to the accident, compensation shall again be paid without its being necessary to show a change of condition for the worse lessening earning capacity.⁵

§ 850. Statutory Regulation

- a. In general
- b. Retrospective or prospective operation of statutes

a. In General

The compensation acts commonly contain provisions, subject to limitations, for the adjustment, termination, or suspension of compensation, under which the compensation authorities or a court may review a prior award or judgment in a proper case and increase, decrease, terminate, or suspend compensation; but such review power is wholly statutory and the exercise of such power must be within statutory terms, liberally construed.

The compensation acts commonly contain provisions, subject to limitations, for the adjustment,

The power of the compensation authorities⁹ or courts¹⁰ thus to adjust, terminate, or suspend compensation is wholly statutory, and their exercise of such power must

While, as will be seen infra § 854, the grounds on which such power may be exercised are not always limited to changes in the condition of the workman, generally speaking, the purpose of statutes conferring such power is to provide a means of increasing, decreasing, or terminating compensation in accordance with the changed condition of the workman as justice requires,¹² or of correcting mistakes

Similar statement

Object of statute dealing with adjustment and modification of awards is to deal fairly and justly with employer and employee alike in decreasing or increasing any previous award which because of subsequent change in condition of em-

and inaccuracies ordinarily inherent in, and incident to, the prognosis involved in entering an award.¹³ The power conferred under such provisions has been said to be similar to the general power of a court to open a judgment during the term at which it was rendered,¹⁴ but is to be distinguished from the power of a tribunal entering an award to rehear the case within a certain period of time and on certain grounds.¹⁵

lature in enacting them,¹⁶ in accordance with general rules of statutory construction.¹⁷ So construed, they will not be applied beyond their scope.¹⁸ Depending on the terms of the statute, the power may be exercised by the proper tribunal or official acting on its or his own motion,¹⁹ or on application of one of the parties in interest.²⁰ A provision of the act that, if no petition for review is filed, the referee's award of compensation shall be the final award of the commission does not bar the commission from reviewing the award of its own motion.²¹ employee or facts not previously considered by commissioner is too large or too small and to prevent any employer from contributing less to the workmen's compensation fund, and any employee from receiving more from it, than is just and equitable in particular case.

To end of providing adequate compensation

Statute authorizing commission within a specified period to review any award on specified grounds and on a sufficient showing, subject to limitations, to make an award ending, diminishing, maintaining, or increasing compensation previously awarded, is a remedial act for purpose of providing adequate compensation for those injured and must be liberally construed to that end. Continuing jurisdiction. Under many compensation acts, either by express terms or construction, the tribunal or official making an award has continuing jurisdiction over it,²² subject to statutory limitations and exceptions,²³ at least, as long as the disability continues,²⁴ and may, in a proper case, modify or change it²⁵ as changing conditions warrant.²⁶ Such statutory power continues irrespective of the reservation of jurisdiction in an award,²⁷ and the compensation authorities are without power to divest themselves of this continuing jurisdiction to modify an award in a proper case, except as authorized by statute.²⁸ The exercise of such statutory power, in the absence of an express restriction, is not conditional on payment by the employer of compensation in accordance with the original award.²⁹ In conferring a continuing jurisdiction on the board, the statute does not purport to give it any authority to undo what has been finally determined;³⁰ it merely authorizes a review of the award in accordance with facts later found to exist;³¹ it does not authorize the board on the death of a dependent to abate a balance due under the award, if any, and revert it to the state insurance fund.³² Although the compensation act does not specifically confer on the commission a continuing power over its awards, such power may be implied from a provision that the commission shall not be bound, except as indicated, by formal rules of procedure but shall proceed in such manner as in its judgment is best to ascertain the substantial rights of the parties and to carry out the spirit of the act.³³ Where the full extent of claimant's injuries cannot be ascertained, the commission not

Whether or not a statute dealing with the revision of awards operates retrospectively or prospectively only is ordinarily to be determined in accordance with general rules of statutory construction and constitutional principles.

Whether or not a statute dealing with the revision of awards operates retrospectively or prospectively only is ordinarily to be determined in accordance with general rules of statutory construction³⁵ and constitutional principles.³⁶ Thus, such statute is ordinarily to be construed as having a prospective operation only unless its terms show clearly a legislative intention that its terms should operate retro-spectively³⁷ or it relates merely to remedies or procedure.³⁸ So, a statute not in terms retroactive, providing that a finding that incapacity had ceased should not be considered final and that after such finding further hearings might be had and further compensation awarded will be construed as having prospective operation only.³⁹ A provision limiting the period within which an award or agreement as to compensation may be modified will not be construed to apply retroactively to prior awards or agreements unless such intention on the part of the legislature is clearly expressed.⁴⁰ However, a provision limiting the power to review an award by limiting the period for modification, if expressly applicable to an existing right, not depriving the employee of it but merely regulating the time for its assertion,⁴¹ or to a claim filed before adoption,⁴² is valid and enforceable.

Authorizing reopening of cases finally determined

Where decision of board that employee's right to compensation was final under existing law, a subsequently enacted statute providing that decision terminating right to compensation should not be considered final and that a further hearing might be had and a further award made, in so far as applicable retroactively, was unconstitutional as depriving insurer of property rights.

Where case was reopened March 29, 1945, after a lump sum settlement had been approved by board and case had been closed in 1941, statute relating to nonschedule adjustment had no application in view of fact it was not enacted until after date of reopening and in view of reclassification of disability.

Extending time for modification or review

(1) An amendment extending period allowed for modification of an award and permitting modification within one year of last payment of compensation applies only to remedy and neither creates new rights nor destroys old and is applicable to claims pending at time it became effective.

D.C.—New Amsterdam Casualty Co. v. Cardillo, 108 F.2d 492, 71 App. D.C. 172.

(2) So, an amendment of compensation act extending time for review of a formal award on the ground of increased incapacity or diminished disability has been viewed as essentially procedural in character and applicable to awards made after its enactment, although based on accidents occurring prior thereto, since amendment was intended to effectuate basic statutory policy of compensation, not beyond prescribed maximum, for entire disability ensuing from compensable accidental injury by extending time for presentation of petition increase or decrease in case of formal awards, to correspond substantially with kindred provisions relating to informal awards, and did not authorize enforcement of a new cause of action, but merely a new proceeding based on a new factual situation.

a. In General

Generally speaking, any award or order relating to an award, within the designated limitations, if any, may be modified, but under some statutes it has been held that the award must be one made after hearing by the compensation officials on contested issues.

Generally speaking, any award or order relating to an award, within the designated limitations, if any, may be modified;⁴³ the statutory power to rescind or alter awards, orders, or findings has been held to extend to, among other awards, orders, or findings, awards made by referees and affirmed by the board;⁴⁴ awards made by the board itself;⁴⁵ an additional award made for the employer's violation of specific safety requirements;⁴⁶ an order denying increased compensation because of misconduct of the employer;⁴⁷ and a finding that applicant has suffered no loss of time for which compensation is payable or any specific loss of use of a member.⁴⁸ Under some statutes it has been held that the provisions for review of awards extend to formal agreements, original or supplemental, for the payment of compensation, approved by the compensation authorities.⁴⁹ However, under other statutes it has been held that an award subject to review must be one made after hearing by the compensation officials on contested issues,⁵⁰ and that the provisions for review are inapplicable to an award based on a voluntary agreement entered into by the parties and approved by the compensation officials on mere inspection thereof.⁵¹ So, it has been held that a determination which is in essence a mere agreement of compromise approved by the compensation authorities without a decision on the merits is not a "formal award" within the meaning

What constitutes award

(1) An "award," within statute authorizing review has been held to mean a decision, determination, or judgment for money, hospitalization, crutches, or other compensation in favor of employee, provided for in workmen's compensation act.

Okl.—Murch Bros. Const. Co. v. Gupp, 57 P.2d 852, 177 Okl. 102—
Oientine v. Calloway, 295 P. 608, 147 Okl. 197.

(2) So, an award for medical expenses has been held to be an award within the purview of statute.

Okl.—Murch Bros. Const. Co. v. Gupp, 57 P.2d 852, 177 Okl. 102.

(3) However, it has also been held that an award for payment of necessary medical care is not an "award of compensation" within meaning of a statute authorizing review of awards of compensation.

Or.—Lindeman v. State Indus. Acc. Commission, 192 P.2d 732, 183 Or. 245.

Vt.—Norman v. American Woolen Co., 84 A.2d 125, 117 Vt. 28.

Disability extending into future

(1) Under some statutes a review of a compensation award may be had when and only when award determines that disability continues into future.

Kan.—Meredith v. Shawver Graham, Inc., 233 P.2d 750, 171 Kan. 518—
Calonder v. F. H. Freeto, Const. Co., 126 P.2d 209, 155 Kan. 497.

(2) Under such statutes a review may not be had when an award determines that all disability has ended prior to award.

No award until action by board

Where referee rendered decision for compensation claimant, employer appealed to compensation board, and employee obtained employment at wages in excess of those received prior to accident, employer's remedy was not a petition for termination of award for change of circumstances, since there was no award until board took final action; referee being merely agent.

of a statutory provision authorizing the review of a formal award.⁵²

Award satisfied by payment. Under some statutes payment in full of an award does not bar review thereof.⁵³ However, under a statute authorizing the review of "any payment to be made," an award which has been satisfied by payment cannot thereafter be reviewed.⁵⁴

b. Finality

A final award or judgment may be reviewed and the compensation officials may review an award, although it has been affirmed or passed on by the courts, or an action is pending to enforce the award, but they may not review an award while an appeal is pending.

Statutory provisions authorizing the adjustment or termination of compensation previously awarded presuppose a final award or judgment establishing a compensable injury,⁵⁵ and thereunder an award, order, finding, or judgment is subject to modification or rescission, subject to statutory limitations, although the employee or other party to the proceeding has, by lapse of time or otherwise, lost the right to appeal from the original determination, or the absolute right to a rehearing, and it has become final.⁵⁶ However, such provisions are inapplicable where there has been no final award or judgment.⁵⁷ Thus, where the commission makes an order which is interlocutory in its nature and not final, it retains full power to proceed to a hearing, investigation, and determination of a claim for an alleged disability without regard to limitations on the power of review commonly contained in such provisions, such as a requirement that a change of condition be shown.⁵⁸

The power of review conferred by such provisions may be exercised by a board or commission, although the award has been affirmed or passed on by the courts,⁵⁹ or an action is pending in the courts to enforce the award.⁶⁰ The compensation authorities may not, however, review an award while an appeal therefrom is pending,⁶¹ and under a statute in effect so providing they may not review an award after a writ of certiorari has been issued by the supreme court.⁶²

Award not final

Award, evidenced by a determination and rule for judgment following request of parties that award be made on basis that employee was twenty per cent totally and permanently disabled, was not a "final judgment," and employee could recover further compensation merely on proof that quantum of disability was greater than twenty per cent of total without showing that his condition had become worse since original hearing.

61. Until disposition of appeal change of condition cannot be shown

Where claimant appealed from order awarding him permanent partial disability, there could be no showing of a change in his condition until disposition of his appeal, but, on final determination of question of his condition, on timely and proper application award could be modified.

c. Period of Compensation

Under some statutes an award for less than a certain period of compensation is not subject to modification, but, apart from such statutes, an order for the payment of compensation at a certain rate per week for total disability until further order has been held to permit a petition to stop or alter payments.

Under certain provisions for the readjustment of awards, including a provision that no readjustment may be made if the award is for less than a certain period, the tribunal, otherwise authorized to make such readjustment, has no power to modify an award for compensation for less than such period.⁶³ The tribunal has the power to modify an award for more than such period,⁶⁴ although part of the period had elapsed when the award was made.⁶⁵

An order for the payment of compensation at a certain rate per week for total disability until further order, but not to exceed a certain sum, has been held to permit a petition to stop or alter payments if such be required.⁶⁶

d. Permanent Disability

Awards for permanent partial or total disability have been held subject to modification, but under some statutes the provisions for review do not apply to an award of compensation for specific scheduled injuries.

Where, under a provision relative to review, a tribunal is authorized to modify an award on the ground of change of condition or increase or decrease of disability, subject to statutory limitations, it may in a proper case modify an award for permanent partial⁶⁷ or total⁶⁸ disability. Under some statutes the provisions for review do not apply to an award of compensation for specific scheduled injuries,⁶⁹ and after an award for a specific loss of a member there can be no additional award for disability solely resulting from, or related to, the permanent injury.⁷⁰

e. Order Denying Compensation

Where statutory authority therefor exists, an order denying compensation may be altered or set aside, but some statutory provisions for review have been construed as not authorizing the review of an order denying compensation.

Where statutory authority therefor exists, an order denying compensation may be altered or set aside.⁷¹ Whether or not such authority exists is to be determined in accordance with general rules of statutory construction,⁷² and some statutory provisions for review have been construed as implying a previous award of compensation,⁷³ and as not authorizing the review of an order denying compensation,⁷⁴ no matter what the reason for the denial of compensation.⁷⁵ So, a provision for review of an award on change of condition has been held inapplicable where no compensation has been awarded and it has been found that the workman's injury was not compensable.⁷⁶ However, notwithstanding the absence of statutory authority for the review of an order denying compensation, where compensation is denied as to part of the claimed injuries but is allowed as to others, a provision authorizing the review of an award granting compensation based on a change in condition permits review as to all claimed injuries.⁷⁷

f. Order Terminating or Suspending Compensation

If authorized under its continuing jurisdiction over its awards, the board or commission may modify its order terminating⁷⁸ or suspending⁷⁹ the payment of compensation.

Award of medical expenses as authorizing review

(1) Where compensation for disability is denied but an award of medical expenses is made, this constitutes an award of compensation such as to give commission continuing jurisdiction to reopen case on change of condition.

(2) So, where board made a finding that claimant suffered permanent accidental injury arising out of, and in course of, his employment, for which medical expenses were payable, but had not reached maximum improvement and awarded medical expenses while denying compensation for wage loss because claimant had not lost sufficient time from work to qualify at that time, and did not dismiss case, claim for compensation was reviewable on a change of condition, since award of medical expenses is award of compensation.

Denial on ground of disability for less than minimum period

(1) After expiration of time for appeal, employee cannot apply for review of award denying compensation, on ground of change in condition, although denial of compensation was solely on ground that disability existed for less than seven days, since new award allowing compensation could not be considered as an "increase" of compensation previously awarded within terms of statute describing what can be done on review for change of condition.

(2) However, it has been held that an award denying compensation on sole ground that disability had existed less than seven days, but awarding medical expenses and specifically retaining jurisdiction pending further permanent disability of claimant, may be reopened on change of condition.

h. Judgments

In the absence of a statute otherwise providing, the final judgment of a court in an action for compensation is not subject to modification, but under some statutes an award, even though reduced to judgment or based on the judgment of a court, may be subject to modification by the compensation authorities.

In the absence of a statute otherwise providing, the final judgment of a court in action for compensation is not subject to modification.⁸³ So, where the compensation act makes no distinction between a judgment under the act and one in any other action for the recovery of money, and the provision authorizing a subsequent increase or decrease in the amount allowed, by its terms, applies only to proceedings based on agreement or arbitration, the provision cannot be extended to authorize the modification of judgments rendered in actions authorized under the act in the absence of agreement or arbitration.⁸⁴ Under a statute in effect so providing when an award has been reduced to judgment it is not subject to review by the compensation officials.⁸⁵ However, under a provision that a judgment under the compensation act may be reviewed at the instance of either party, on certain grounds the court is authorized to do so in a proper case;⁸⁶ and under some statutes an award based on the judgment of a court may be subject to the continuing jurisdiction of the compensation officials and, in a proper case, may be modified by them.⁸⁷ Where the compensation act authorizes the entry of a judgment on an award and the continuing jurisdiction of the board to modify such award, such judgments are not like those in ordinary civil actions to the extent that they are not subject to modification, but, if an award is modified by the board, the court, on a proper application, has the power to modify the judgment to correspond with the award as modified by the board.⁸⁸

i. Award to Dependents

Under a statute in effect so providing an award to a dependent may be modified in a proper case.

Under a provision that any award of compensation shall be subject to modification, whenever it shall appear to the compensation commissioner that the measure of dependence, because of which the compensation is paid, has changed, the commissioner has the power to modify an award to a dependent where the measure of dependence has changed.⁸⁹

j. Lump Sum

Where a tribunal has continuing jurisdiction over its awards, in the absence of a statutory limitation, it has power, in a proper case, to rescind or modify a lump sum award.

Where a tribunal, under the compensation act, has a continuing jurisdiction over its awards, in the absence of a statutory limitation, it has power, in a proper case, to rescind or modify a lump sum award.⁹⁰ A provision authorizing the review of any order for weekly payments includes an order for compensation in weekly payments fixing the amount due at the time of the award.⁹¹

§ 852. Scope and Extent of Power

- c. Reclassification

a. In General

The scope and extent of the power to exercise a continuing jurisdiction over awards and decisions with respect to compensation depend on the statutory and constitutional provisions applicable and may to a degree depend on the rules adopted by the compensation authorities; but the continuing jurisdiction is generally limited, although some statutes rest a broad revisory power in the compensation officials.

The scope and extent of the power to review or exercise a continuing jurisdiction over awards and decisions with respect to compensation depend on the statutory⁹² and constitutional⁹³ provisions applicable, and may to a degree depend on the rules adopted by the compensation authorities.⁹⁴ Generally speaking, the jurisdiction conferred is limited,⁹⁵ and may be exercised only when the one seeking a change makes a showing bringing the case within the applicable statutory provisions.⁹⁶ Thus, under some statutes, it may be exercised only when there is a change in a claimant's physical condi-

Authority expressly granted or reasonably implied

Authority of compensation authorities is confined to that granted in express terms and such as is reasonably to be implied.

Method by which compensation may be ended is specially fixed by statute, and such statutory method of ending compensation is exclusive, and it does not lie within power of compensation authorities to engraft on statute another method of permanently ending compensation.

Action on insufficient application of claimant

Where board has power to reopen compensation proceeding on its own motion and did desire to reopen, its action would be taken to be a reopening of board's own motion, and, therefore, it was of no consequence that board might actually have reopened matter in response to claimant's insufficient letter or his tardy claims.

Compensation authorities and courts bound by requirements

Where legislature in plain language prescribes what shall be required as a prerequisite to allowance of an increase of compensation, compensation commissioner and compensation appeal board, no less than courts, are bound thereby.

93. Ruling amounting to denial of due process

Commission exceeded its jurisdiction in submitting and determining self-insured employer's petition to terminate its liability on an award without permitting employer to obtain a medical examination to ascertain present physical condition of claimant who was in another state and to cross-examine him in that respect, and in effect commission's ruling amounted to a denial of "due process of law" by refusing to permit employer to cross-examine a witness on a material issue.

tion since the prior award,⁹⁷ or the power may be limited to a review of the disability, in so far as it may have subsequently increased,⁹⁸ diminished⁹⁹ or terminated.¹

Some statutes rest a broad revisory power in the compensation officials,² and give them a broad discretion in determining whether an award shall be reopened,³ and, in the absence of a showing of abuse of discretion, their action is not subject to control by the courts.⁴ A provision that the jurisdiction of the commission over each case shall be continuing and that the commission may, from time to time, make such changes in its former findings or orders as, in its opinion, may be just confers, within the limitations of the act, a broad and comprehensive power,⁵ and it has been held that the power thus conferred is not limited to cases in which there have been changes in disability conditions.⁶ However, it has also been held that such provision is subject to the limitation that the commission may not resume jurisdiction of a case regularly determined without some change or new development in the injury complained of and not known to the parties when the former award was made,⁷ and that the exercise of power under such provision must be predicated on new and changed conditions occurring after an original award.⁸

In determining whether a compensation case should be reopened the compensation officials may look to the record made at a former hearing or hearings had before it with respect to the same accident or injury.⁹

Under a provision authorizing, on the review of an award, another award increasing the compensation previously awarded, the commission is authorized to increase an award which it has made tentatively.¹⁰ The "increase" of an award may include extending the time it is to run as well as augmenting the installments.¹¹

Termination. Where the compensation act vests a continuing jurisdiction in the board or commission over its awards, it generally has the power, in the proper exercise of its authority, to terminate the payment of compensation.¹² Where the board is forbidden to make an award in excess of a certain amount and, although limiting the period of compensation to that fixed by statute, fails to fix the amount of compensation at the statutory limitation, the award is incomplete and the board has the power to terminate the payments of compensation so as not to exceed such statutory limitation.¹³

Degree of impairment of wage-earning capacity. Where compensation for permanent partial disability is calculated on the wage-earning capacity of the workman, the degree of impairment of the wage-earning capacity, where such reconsideration is authorized by statute, may be reconsidered by the commission, on its own motion or the application of any party in interest, if the finding is erroneous or the degree of wage-earning capacity has changed.¹⁴

Change from permanent to temporary disability payment. Under a provision that, where an injury causes both temporary and permanent disability, the injured employee shall not be entitled to both a temporary and permanent disability payment, but only to the greater of the two, the power to allow a temporary disability payment in lieu of a permanent disability payment is a power which, from the nature of the object to be accomplished, must be a continuing power and within the scope of the continuing jurisdiction of the board or commission under the act.¹⁵

Additional award for employer's violation of safety requirements. The power to modify an award does not authorize the granting of an additional award because of the employer's violation of specific safety requirements, since such award is separate and distinct from the original award of compensation and cannot be regarded as a modification thereof.¹⁶

Loss of jurisdiction by acceptance of final payment. Under some statutes the commission's jurisdiction to hear and determine a petition for review and modification of a compensation award may be lost by the subsequent tender and acceptance of the final payment due under the original award before a day has been fixed for hearing the petition for review.¹⁷

Medical examination of employee. Rules governing the scope and extent of the power of compensation authorities to direct a medical examination of the employee, as discussed supra § 484, in connection with original proceedings to secure compensation, have been applied in subsequent proceedings to review or modify the original award.¹⁸

Advance payment

Where during entire period covered by compensation award claimant has been paid semimonthly and had accepted checks covering compensation partially due and partially payable in future, issuance of check for final payment a few days in advance of last day for which compensation was due, and which check claimant accepted before date set for hearing on petition for review and modification of award thereby depriving commission of jurisdiction to hear petition for review, did not constitute an attempt to shorten period of liability by voluntarily advancing payments.

Kan.—Everett v. Kansas Power Co., 165 P.2d 595, 160 Kan. 712.

18. Appointment of disinterested physician discretionary

Where physician for employer and insurance carrier made two examinations of compensation claimant, one just before hearing on application for review on ground of change in condition, director's appointment of disinterested physician to examine claimant was discretionary, and his refusal to appoint disinterested physician was not an abuse of discretion, although claimant was unable because of poverty to secure physician for himself and there was positive testimony that his condition was worse.

Provision construed

Section of compensation act, providing that new compensation order issued by commission after review of compensation case shall not affect compensation previously paid and that, if any part of compensation due is unpaid, award decreasing compensation rate may be made effective from date of employee's injury and any prior payment in excess of decreased rate shall be deducted from unpaid compensation, means that overpayment arises only when award decreasing rate is made effective from date of injury or at date before payments were made at rate set in order modified.

to statutory authority.²¹ Under a provision authorizing the modification of an award on the ground of a change in conditions, subject to the express limitation that no such review shall affect such award with respect to any moneys already paid when an award is modified "on the ground of a change in conditions," it cannot affect any moneys already paid,²² and if, under such provision, the award is increased, the increase has only prospective effect,²³ and cannot be made retroactive;²⁴ but if the award is modified because the original award was improper in its inception, because based on a mistake as to the nature of the injuries,²⁵ such limitation does not apply to the general power vested in the board to make such changes in its awards as in its opinion may be just. The expression "any moneys already paid" of such limitation is to be construed literally as including only money actually paid;²⁶ accordingly, the limitation does not apply to the case of uncashed drafts.²⁷ The commission is not authorized, on an application based on the ground of change of condition, to order compensation paid for permanent partial disability to be applied as compensation for temporary total disability.²⁸

Where statutory authority therefor exists, subject to statutory limitations, the compensation authorities may reclassify a disability.

Under the general power vested in the board to make such changes in its awards, from time to time, as in its opinion may be just, subject to the limitation that the board may reclassify a disability within one year from the date of accident, the expression "reclassify a disability" refers to the general classification as indicated by the statute, namely, permanent total disability, temporary total disability, permanent partial disability, and temporary partial disability, and not to the schedule period of classification within a class;²⁹ accordingly, a change of the period of compensation within a class may be made after a year from the date of the accident,³⁰ but the injuries may not be reclassified by a change from one of the four general classes, thus indicated, to another except within the year.³¹ Under a statute so providing the board may at any time, without regard to the date of an accident, reclassify a disability on proof that there has been a change of condition or that the previous classification was erroneous;³² but such statute does not confer power on the board to direct the employer to pay a stale claim contrary to the limitations imposed by the compensation act.³³

§ 853. Conclusiveness of Original Award or Judgment

- a. In general
- b. Effect of statutes

a. In General

Generally speaking, except as abrogated, modified, or limited by provisions of the compensation acts, the res judicata rule applies in compensation proceedings, and a final award or judgment in a compensation case is, subject to the right of appeal, conclusive as to all matters adjudicated, but is not res judicata of issues neither asserted nor required to be asserted. Where the essential elements of waiver or estoppel are found to exist, a person may be barred from denying the validity or effect of a compensation award.

Generally speaking, except as abrogated, modified, or limited by provisions of the compensation acts, the res judicata rule applies in compensation proceedings.³⁴ Except as provided otherwise by stat-

Conclusiveness and effect of award or judgment in compensation proceedings generally see supra §§ 655-659.

Who bound

(1) An award is as binding on compensation officials as on parties. Ariz.—Schultz v. Industrial Commission, 37 P.2d 372, 44 Ariz. 357.

(2) Even though one of parties before trial commissioner took no appeal from his order to commission en banc, all parties to proceeding before commissioner were made parties before commission en banc on appeal of one of parties, and order of commission was binding on all parties.

Okl.—Sullivan-Anderson Well Servicing Co. v. Sullivan, 312 P.2d 943.

(3) Where neither principal nor its carrier were parties to workmen's compensation proceeding brought by claimant against immediate employer, trial court was without authority to determine rights as between principal and its carrier and immediate employer and its carrier, and any such determination of rights would not be res judicata.

Kan.—Attebery v. Griffin Const. Co., 312 P.2d 593, 181 Kan. 450.

Questions of law or fact

(1) Except as provided otherwise by statute, original award or judgment is conclusive as to all questions of law determined.

Mo.—Ferguson v. Ozark Distributing Co., 117 S.W.2d 399, 233 Mo.App. 68.

N.J.—Tucker v. Frank J. Beltramo, Inc., 186 A. 821, 117 N.J.Law 72, affirmed 192 A. 62, 118 N.J.Law 301. 71 C.J. p 1436 note 60.

(2) It is likewise conclusive of all questions of fact determined.

U.S.—Alaska Indus. Bd. v. Chugach Elec. Ass'n, C.A.Alaska, 245 F.2d 855, reversed on other grounds 78 S.Ct. 735, 356 U.S. 320, 2 L.Ed.2d 795.

(3) Under a statute providing for reopening of an award if "it shall afterwards develop" that claimant was or is entitled to a higher rate of compensation, quoted words are not limited to changes of physical condition but include cases in which errors of law are disclosed and permit redetermination of questions of law affecting rate of compensation. U.S.—Alaska Indus. Bd. v. Chugach Elec. Ass'n, C.A.Alaska, 245 F.2d 855, reversed on other grounds 78 S.Ct. 735, 356 U.S. 320, 2 L.Ed.2d 795.

Compensation for certain period unless disability sooner ends

Where employee brought adversary proceedings for workmen's compensation and recovered a judgment for compensation for certain period, unless claimant's total disability should sooner terminate, award was conclusive between parties and employer could not subsequently have re-examined extent of disability.

Ala.—Sloss Sheffield Steel & Iron Co. v. Nations, 8 So.2d 833, 243 Ala. 107—Ex parte Johnston, 165 So. 108, 231 Ala. 458.

Formal deficiencies in findings made in support of an order are waived where no appeal is taken within time allowed.

Pa.—Michetti v. State Workmen's Ins. Fund, 17 A.2d 712, 143 Pa. Super. 458.

Award for wrist res judicata as to arm

Award for permanent partial disability for injury to compensation claimant's right wrist was res judicata as to entire arm, where in compensation proceeding

all matters which may be adjudicable,³⁷ and all issues before the tribunal at the time of entry of its decision,³⁸ although there is authority to the effect that an award or judgment does not conclude matters not decided, even though an issue as to such matters was raised,³⁹ or such matters might have been or should have been decided.⁴⁰ However, it is not res judicata of issues neither asserted nor required to be asserted,⁴¹ or which could not properly be asserted.⁴² To have the conclusive character of a final judgment a compensation award must rest on an independent determination of the issues on the merits after hearing in the customary mode.⁴³ Thus, while denial of a motion to reopen an award after a hearing on the merits bars a subsequent motion to reopen based on the same grounds,⁴⁴ denial of such motion on an adjudication of technical insufficiency without an examination of the merits will not bar a subsequent motion based on the same grounds.⁴⁵ Likewise, where an order is based on an ex parte application and is not a decision on the merits, questions properly involved may be considered left open for future determination.⁴⁶ A final adjudication that a claimant is not entitled to compensation for total disability is not res judicata of the entire controversy between the parties arising from a compensable injury,⁴⁷ and does not preclude claimant from subsequently raising the question of whether he is entitled to compensation for partial disability.⁴⁸

Where a determination by the compensation officials is not final, the case remains open for final adjudication.⁴⁹ At least under some statutes, an any provision for making of a fractional award, that is, an award for an "upper arm" and a "lower arm." Okl.—Behling v. Fox Rig & Lumber Co., 105 P.2d 532, 187 Okl. 682.

Retention of a compensation case on docket by original judgment "for such further and necessary orders as may be mete and proper in the premises" cannot in face of a statute declaring that decision of judge hearing case shall be conclusive and binding on parties, subject to right of appeal, and limiting subsequent proceedings to those for moneys determined to be due, authorize a re-examination of facts and fixation of a different basis of liability. 39. Loss of hearing issue presented but not decided

Where an employee sustains an injury which results in loss of an eye and loss of hearing, and state industrial commission makes an award based on loss of eye, but makes no finding as to whether or not there was a loss of hearing, and makes no award based on a loss of hearing, although issue as to loss of hearing was presented, it has jurisdiction to make a finding of loss of hearing and an award based on it.

N.J.—Janvari v. Peter Schweitzer Co., 91 A.2d 113, 21 N.J.Super. 248.

Issue of medical or surgical treatment

(1) Issue of medical or surgical treatment is not necessarily involved in a compensation matter, and while issue may be submitted by employee in his petition for compensation, it need not be, and where it has not been asserted, an award of compensation is not res judicata of issue.

N.J.—Van Tuyl v. Federal Shipbuilding & Dry Dock Co., 108 A.2d 483, 32 N.J.Super. 406—Janvari v. Peter Schweitzer Co., 91 A.2d 113, 21 N.J.Super. 248—Janvari v. Peter Schweitzer Co., 80 A.2d 367, 13 N.J. Super. 286.

(2) Where a determination on employee's original claim for temporary disability that claim was barred by limitation was inevitable, fact that referee in his report, or commission in its pleading before court on review, asserted that no medical treatment was furnished was not determinative of that question so as to preclude a subsequent determination that medical treatment had been furnished as a foundation for continuing jurisdiction of commission to make an award for a new and further disability.

Memorandum not signed, filed, or sent to parties

Unsigned memorandum relating to compensation claim which was not filed as required by statute and copies award for temporary disability is not regarded as final and leaves the case open for a subsequent award for permanent disability.⁵⁰

Award based on agreement. An agreement purporting to settle a compensation claim when approved by the compensation authorities may become in legal effect an award which is res judicata of the matters adjudicated and agreed on.⁵¹ An award based not on independent findings of fact, but on adoption and approval of an agreement entered into by the parties has been held to be final and conclusive only up to the date of its entry.⁵²

In subsequent proceedings for death benefits. Final determinations made in proceedings by a workman to secure compensation are res judicata in subsequent proceedings brought by his widow or dependents to recover death benefits under the compensation act.⁵³ Thus, if it has been determined in the workman's proceeding that the accident is com-

pensable, that fact is res judicata in subsequent proceedings for death benefits.⁵⁴

Admission. A failure to appeal from an award coupled with payment thereunder may operate as an admission of the disability found.⁵⁵

Waiver and estoppel. Where the essential elements of waiver⁵⁶ or estoppel⁵⁷ are found to exist, a person may be barred to deny the validity or effect of a compensation award. When payment of compensation is made under an award, it has been held that the parties are bound thereby, at least in so far as any change may be made by virtue of a statute authorizing modification, reinstatement, suspension, or termination of an award on a showing that the disability of the employee has increased, decreased, recurred, or terminated.⁵⁸

b. Effect of Statutes

The conclusiveness or effect as res judicata of the original or prior award or judgment in compensation proof which were not sent to parties, held not "final order" which would preclude subsequent award to claimant.

U.S.—American Mut. Liability Ins. Co. of Boston v. Lowe, C.C.A.N.J., 85 F.2d 625.

Order of payments until final determination

Order requiring employer to pay employee compensation at specified weekly rate and to continue such payments until final determination or until otherwise ordered by commission held not "final order" so as to preclude a commission from exercising further jurisdiction, since it indicated commission intended to retain jurisdiction of cause, and contemplated further hearing to determine extent of disability.

Okl.—Orth Kleifeker & Wallace v. Scott, 49 P.2d 112, 173 Okl. 448.

Board's approval of agreement between parties for less than adequate compensation does not have character of final judgment and is not conclusive, evident purpose of statutory requirement of board's approbation of an agreement for compensation being to secure full compliance with statute.

N.J.—Streng's Piece Dye Works v. Galasso, 191 A. 874, 118 N.J.Law 257.

Recommendation

Where commission has made no award or finding but simply a recommendation, it must be taken as tentative and as leaving case still open for final adjudication.

Utah—Silver King Coalition Mines Co. v. Industrial Commission of Utah, 69 P.2d 608, 92 Utah 511.

50, Okl.—T. C. Ottinger Co. v. Hall, 73 P.2d 463, 181 Okl. 284.

Award continuing cause

Where commission awarded an injured employee compensation for temporary total disability and continued cause to a future date to determine any permanent partial disability that might exist, but made no order that employee's temporary disability had ceased, it is not precluded on a subsequent hearing, on motion of injured employee for further compensation for total permanent disability, from entering an order requiring further payment for temporary total disability.

Okl.—Earl W. Baker & Co. v. Holcomb, 16 P.2d 64, 160 Okl. 129.

"The payment of the temporary disability award, and the release thereon, was no bar to the subsequent proceeding for compensation for the permanent disability caused by the injury."

Cal.—Massachusetts Bonding & Ins. Co. v. Industrial Accident Commission of California, 168 P. 1050, 1052, 176 C. 488.

Where statute authorizes award for partial incapacity, after expiration of specified period of total disability, award may be granted in a proper case, although there has been a prior determination on an application for total incapacity.

54. N.J.—Hagerman v. Lewis Lumber Co., supra.

55. Admission of total disability

An employer's failure to appeal from original award of compensation for total disability resulting from leg injury, and his making of payments thereunder for more than a year, amounted to an "admission" that employee had been totally disabled by leg injury for period of approximately two years.

Pa.—Thomas v. Susquehanna Collieries Co., 25 A.2d 98, 148 Pa.Super. 161.

56. Employer and carrier held not to have waived right to deny causal relation between accident and hemiplegia because original award for fracture of leg was paid without question, where it did not appear that employee made any assertion that hemiplegia was result of accident until long after payment of award for fracture.

N.Y.—Springer v. Van Dorn, 288 N.Y.S. 312, 247 App.Div. 436, amendment of decision denied 290 N.Y.S. 547, 248 App.Div. 797.

ceedings may be limited or otherwise affected by provisions for review contained in the compensation acts; but statutes authorizing the review or modification of an award or judgment on a change of condition, the recurrence of the incapacity, or its aggravation, increase, or termination do not affect the conclusiveness of the award or judgment in question as to matters of law or fact residing in the adjudication, although the prior award or judgment is not res judicata as to matters open to review under such statutes.

The conclusiveness or effect as res judicata of the original or prior award or judgment in compensation proceedings may be limited or otherwise affected by provisions for review contained in the compensation acts,⁵⁹ such as those authorizing the compensation officials to rescind, alter, or amend an award for good cause shown,⁶⁰ error or mistake,⁶¹ or whenever in the opinion of the compensation officials a change may be justified.⁶² Thus, under a statute authorizing review on the ground of a mistake in a determination of fact, an award based on such mistake is not res judicata.⁶³ So, under a statute authorizing the compensation officials to review an award on the ground of error, mistake, or change of condition, their determinations as to the extent and duration of the disability and the amount or compensation properly to be awarded are subject to future change in the event the estimate on which the award was originally based proves to be incorrect.⁶⁴ However, such statutes do not necessarily deprive the original or prior award or judgment of all effect as res judicata.⁶⁵ A statute authorizing the compensation officials to review an award for good cause shown does not authorize such officials to re-examine a question of law determined by a court on an appeal from their prior award.⁶⁶

Statutes authorizing review or modification of an award or judgment on a change of condition, the recurrence of the incapacity, or its aggravation, increase, diminution, or termination do not affect the Right to compensation for later results of injury

(1) Under a statute giving commission power to make such modifications or changes with respect to former findings or decisions as in its opinion may be justified, an award does not render res judicata question of whether claimant might not be entitled to further compensation for results of injury later developing.

Ohio.—Cramer v. Industrial Commission, 57 N.E.2d 233, 144 Ohio St. 135.—State ex rel. Weinberger v. Industrial Commission, 38 N.E.2d 395, 139 Ohio St. 92.

(2) Under such statute an award for disability, not permanent and total, for a period expiring at a certain time, whether before or after rendition of judgment, is not res judicata in subsequent proceeding for compensation for permanent and total disability existing after expiration of that period.

Ohio.—Cramer v. Industrial Commission, supra.

(3) Under such statute even a decision of a court on appeal is not

"res judicata" of question whether claimant might not be entitled to further compensation for results of injury later developing.

Statute authorizing modification in accordance with facts found

A statute providing that compensation officials may review an award, and in accordance with the facts found on such review, may end, diminish, or increase compensation previously awarded, does not authorize compensation officials to correct errors of law inherent in judgment of a court on an appeal from their prior award.

conclusiveness of the award or judgment in question as to matters of law or fact residing in the adjudication.⁶⁷ In proceedings brought under such statutes the original or prior award or judgment is conclusive of all questions determined,⁶⁸ whether of law⁶⁹ or of fact,⁷⁰ or which might have been presented and determined,⁷¹ and all essentials leading to the award or judgment,⁷² including those involving jurisdiction,⁷³ the right to compensation,⁷⁴

Not means of correcting errors

(1) Statutes such as those referred to in text do not afford means of correcting errors made in original or prior award or judgment.

Tex.—Commercial Standard Ins. Co. v. Brock, Civ.App., 167 S.W.2d 281, error refused.

(3) Even though whole evidence in a proceeding to review an award under such statutes should show that original award was wrong, original award cannot be reviewed or set aside.

Essential ultimate facts

In proceedings under provision conferring continuing jurisdiction on board to modify payment previously awarded because of change in condition, essential ultimate facts necessary to be established and which were adjudicated in original award could not be reviewed.

In North Carolina

In a proceeding by a workman to set aside a compensation award on ground that he was an independent contractor and not an employee and that therefore commission was without jurisdiction to make an award, wherein defendants claimed that commission could not determine workman's challenge to its jurisdiction because compensation act authorized review only on ground of change of condition, it was held that statute authorizing review on ground of change of condition applies only where commission has jurisdiction and does not preclude an attack on an award because of commission's lack of jurisdiction of subject matter. N.C.—Hart v. Thomasville Motors, Inc., 92 S.E.2d 678, 244 N.C. 84.

In Oklahoma

(1) An adjudication of a jurisdictional issue precludes inquiry into jurisdictional question in subsequent proceedings for compensation on ground of change of condition.

Terminal v. Vineyard, 143 P.2d 610, 193 Okl. 388—Hughes Motor Co. v. Thomas, 299 P. 176, 149 Okl. 16.

(2) Where evidence in original compensation proceeding is sufficient to establish fact on which commission's jurisdiction depends, commission by taking jurisdiction will be deemed to have determined jurisdictional fact, precluding inquiry into jurisdictional question in subsequent proceedings for compensation on ground of change of condition.

(3) This rule is especially applicable as against an employer attacking an order on jurisdictional grounds where employer on his own motion requested commission to conduct a hearing and make order being attacked, participated in hearing, and complied with order.

Okl.—Beck v. Davis, 54 P.2d 371, 175 Okl. 623.

(4) However, where commission merely approved a compensation settlement, in absence of a statement of facts and without hearing evidence or making findings, commission's jurisdiction to reopen case because of employee's changed condition may be questioned.

Where compensation award against first employer is made to employee for injuries, and for increase in such injuries during employment by a second employer, and award becomes final, and second award in same amount is made against second employer for a second injury and that award becomes final, two awards are res judicata on issue whether there were separate injuries in subsequent suit to set aside order refusing to terminate compensation.

(1) Finding as to earning capacity of injured employee, made in order to fix rate of compensation, may be considered only as a determination of earning capacity as of date of determination, since physical condition and earning capacity of employee may thereafter change.

Okl.—Dennehy Const. Co. v. Kidd, 137 P.2d 535, 192 Okl. 463.

(2) Where former decision suspended employee's right to compensation because she was being paid wages in excess of what she was earning at time of her injury without finding that she had recovered therefrom or that her incapacity had entirely ceased, such fact did not prevent employee from petitioning to review former decision for increase in compensation after such excessive earnings ceased.

R.I.—Pepe v. American Silk Spinning Co., 38 A.2d 474, 70 R.I. 309.

Cause of increased disability

(1) Whether an increase of disability

the only matters which may be considered in proceedings for review brought under such statutory provisions.⁸⁶ Thus, in subsequent proceedings it cannot be shown that at the time of an award for partial disability claimant was in fact totally disabled.⁸⁷ When review is sought on the ground of change of condition since the prior award, unless such change is shown the prior award or judgment is res judicata,⁸⁸ but if such change is shown, it is open to modification,⁸⁹ despite the affirmance of the original award on appeal.⁹⁰ Thus, an award or adjudication of partial disability does not preclude a subsequent award for increased⁹¹ or total⁹² disability based on a change of condition since the prior award. The compensation officials are without power to make an award that would bar either employee, employer, or insurer from the right to have the award reviewed on the ground of a subsequent change in the condition of the employee.⁹³

Statute governing effect of finding discontinuing compensation. Under a statute so providing when in any case there appears of record a finding that the employee is entitled to compensation, no subsequent finding discontinuing compensation on the ground that the employee's incapacity has ceased may be considered final as a matter of fact or res judicata as a matter of law; and the employee may have further hearings as to whether his incapacity is the result of the injuries for which he received compensation.⁹⁴

(2) A finding that operations necessitated by compensable injury precipitated an attack of heart disease "from which symptoms he is not as yet free," and ordering continuance of compensation payments for total disability, from which decision neither party appealed, was not a final determination as to permanent injury resulting from heart condition where question of permanency was not considered, and it was, therefore, duty of compensation officials in subsequent proceeding to ascertain actual condition of claimant's heart at that time and determine whether it was connected with injury.

Order approving settlement purporting to cover future disability

An order approving a lump sum settlement between an employee and an employer, reciting that amount paid is equal to value of probable future payments and should be a complete settlement of any disability that employee may now have or in future may have is not, even when acted on, conclusive of employee's right to additional compensation alleged because of change in condition.

Finding of no causal relation

Where claimant suffered knee injury, and compensation was awarded, reserving claimant's rights, for knee injury but denied as to period when claimant suffered only from a rash, claimant was not barred, by decision that rash was not causally connected with injury, from recovering compensation for rash on subsequently discovered evidence that rash had causal connection with knee injury in view of statute referred to in text.

a. In General

The increase, diminution, termination, or suspension of compensation previously awarded may be only for the grounds expressly or necessarily implied in the provisions of the act applicable.

The increase, diminution, termination, or suspension of compensation previously awarded, as commonly authorized by the compensation act, may be for the grounds expressed or necessarily implied in the provisions of the act applicable, and only for such grounds.⁹⁵ Where the provisions of the act by which the amount of compensation is to be determined are applicable to all ages, no reduction because of old age is authorized.⁹⁶

Facts not previously considered. Where statutory authority therefor exists, an award of additional compensation may be made on a showing of some new fact not theretofore considered which would entitle claimant to greater benefits than he has already received.⁹⁷

b. Good Cause

Under statutes in effect so providing, an award or decision may be modified for good cause, and what constitutes good cause depends largely on the circumstances of each case.

Under a provision vesting the commission with a continuing jurisdiction to modify its orders, decisions, and awards, on good cause appearing therefor, whatever constitutes "good cause" is a necessary and sufficient ground for such modification;⁹⁸ a change in the physical condition of the workman is not the only ground.⁹⁹ What constitutes "good cause" depends largely on the circumstances of each case.¹ The existence of some circumstance which warrants the conclusion that the challenged award is inequitable is a necessary element to the exercise of continued jurisdiction to modify orders, decisions, and awards for good cause;² and a change cannot be predicated on a mere change of opinion by the commission as to the correctness of Sufficient "good cause"

In compensation proceeding, testimony of doctor in report to commission that past history of employee had no bearing on present injured condition held sufficient "good cause" for order rescinding earlier award and establishing finding that all disability sustained was due to injury complained of.

Cal.—Department of Public Works v. Industrial Acc. Commission, 37 P. 2d 196, 1 C.A.2d 534.

Insufficient showing

Allegedly newly discovered evidence that employee's disability after designated date was caused or exacerbated by injury arising out of employment held insufficient to show "good cause" within statute for reopening case and granting employee increased award, especially where employee could with reasonable diligence have discovered and produced much of such evidence at hearing.

its original decision.³ Although a provision vesting the commission with a continuing jurisdiction and power to modify its former findings and orders as in its opinion may be justified does not expressly state that good cause must be shown for such modification, it is a necessary ground.⁴

c. Change of Condition

Where statutory authority therefor exists, a change of condition or conditions is a sufficient ground for increasing, decreasing, terminating, or suspending payments of compensation, but the change must be actual, material, and substantial and as a general rule must be a change in the physical condition of the employee affecting his earning capacity and must be due to the original injury.

In the absence of a statute otherwise providing, a change in condition of the injured workman is not a ground for altering an award of compensation.⁵ However, where statutory authority therefor exists, a change of condition or conditions is a sufficient ground for increasing, decreasing, terminating, or suspending payments of compensation,⁶ and, if the Previous award essential

Statute providing for review of any award by commission on ground of a changed condition, has no application except where it appears that a previous award has been made by industrial commission.

Change not changing incapacity

A change in condition which does not increase or decrease incapacity is not such change as will justify an alteration of an award, so that where compensation claimant was temporarily totally disabled as result of a second-degree hernia, change in condition from a second-degree to third-degree hernia, which did not change temporary total disability, did not authorize a change in compensation order.

Error as to disease causing disability

Finding that compensation claimant was disabled by infectious arthritis, which during earlier stages could not be distinguished from rheumatic fever to which claimant's disability was erroneously attributed on prior hearing, held not to justify compensation award on ground of "changed conditions of facts" arising after previous award.

15. In Indiana

(1) It has been held that phrase "change in conditions" does not necessarily mean that there must be a change in physical condition.

Ind.—Swift & Co. v. Neal, 18 N.E.2d 491, 106 Ind.App. 139.

(2) However, there is also authority interpreting phrase to mean a change in physical condition of employee.

Ind.—Jackson Hill Coal & Coke Co.

v. Gregson, 150 N.E. 398, 84 Ind. App. 170.

(3) So, it has been said that "unfortunately in the past this [phrase] has been interpreted to mean a change in the physical condition of the injured one but certainly this was not what the general assembly had in mind."

work,¹⁸ except in cases of loss of use of a specific member;¹⁹ and it must be due to the original injury,²⁰ even though manifesting itself in injuries not expressly enumerated in the original award²¹ or theretofore compensated.²² Accordingly, a change in economic conditions has been held insufficient to authorize a modification of an award,²³ although the employee, as a result of his physical condition, is unable to obtain employment.²⁴ Imprisonment of the workman²⁵ or his commitment to a mental institution²⁶ are not factors which may be relied on in determining whether there has been a change in conditions. In Oklahoma

(1) Rule stated in text has been followed.

Okl.—Incas Lead & Zinc Co. v. Morgan, 17 P.2d 370, 161 Okl. 33.

(2) However, it has been declared that provision authorizing commission to review an award at any time on ground of a change in conditions should be liberally construed in interest of employee, and authorizes commission to take into consideration all of conditions pathological, physical, and industrial which may, in any way, have a direct bearing on rights of injured employee.

compensation officials may make an additional award for injuries, caused by the same accident but overlooked, unmentioned, or unknown in making the original award or other order,²⁹ without a showing of a change of condition.³⁰ However, where claimant at the time an award is made, knows of injuries other than those for which he is being compensated, and exercises his judgment as to the seriousness of such other injuries and makes no claim therefor, an additional award therefor is not authorized, especially after the statute of limitations has run.³¹ A statute, limiting the compensation for a particular injury, does not preclude the award of additional compensation for other injuries received at the time, for which the employee has not been compensated.³² Under some statutes impairment and disability are regarded as distinct claims or causes of action and an award for disability alone does not preclude a subsequent award for impairment.³³ A statute, vesting the compensation officials with a continuing jurisdiction, will not authorize the reexamination of a question, determined at the original hearing, involving the relation of a specific injury to the accident.³⁴

Traumatic psychoneuroses

(1) Where compensation claimant's traumatic psychoneurosis was not involved in prior proceedings, award based on finding that claimant suffered from traumatic psychoneurosis as result of original compensable injury but was unaware of his condition at time of former order stopping compensation was authorized.

Mich.—Laichalk v. Chicago Pneumatic Tool Co., 13 N.W.2d 826, 308 Mich. 298.

(2) So, where injury mentioned in notice and application for adjustment of claim filed by employer was "loss of sight of the eye," no reference being made to other injury or disability, and on hearing inquiry was directed exclusively to question of specific loss of that eye, an award relating solely to loss of eye was not res judicata of right to compensation for total disability from traumatic neurosis allegedly resulting from accident to the eye, notwithstanding employee had lost sight of other eye prior to entering employment.

award.³⁵ A provision authorizing an additional award in case of aggravation of the disability has been held to apply to cases in which the disability proves to be greater than was supposed when the award was made,³⁶ but not to cases where the workman's condition has been aggravated as a result of a further accident, whether compensable or not,³⁷ or pre-existing conditions not related to the original injury.³⁸ Under such provisions it has been held that there can be no award for aggravation of a permanent partial disability unless it appears that the condition of the injured workman had previously been determined to have reached a fixed state, that a rate of compensation was established, that the claim was closed on that basis and that an increase of disability has occurred after such closing.³⁹ Although a workman has been denied compensation for an injury because he still has the use of the organ in question, should the impairment increase, the compensation officials under a continuing jurisdiction to amend their decisions have the power to reconsider their order.⁴⁰ A workman using reasonable care in the selection of physicians and submitting to treatment, such as a surgical operation, which is unsuccessful, may recover compensation for increased permanent disability resulting from such treatment.⁴¹

Prior permanent partial disability or time loss not essential

(1) In order to warrant recovery for aggravation it has been declared that it is not necessary that there shall have been any previous permanent partial disability or time loss. Wash.—Collins v. Department of Labor and Industries, supra.

(2) However this may be, mere closing of a claim with only time loss and no finding of a disability does not bar recovery for aggravation of disability on theory that there was no disability to become aggravated, since there must have been a disability to warrant payment of time loss, and a disability even though deemed to have been terminated at time of closing of claim, may thereafter become aggravated.

Subsequent to award and prior to application

To recover in proceeding before board to reopen claim on ground of aggravation of injury for which award had been made, some aggravation must have occurred subsequent to date of award and prior to claimant's application to reopen claim.

had been merely dormant and became active because of the injury, additional compensation may be authorized.⁴⁴ However, under some statutes there can be no recovery of additional compensation for a nonoccupational disease resulting from the injury after an award determining the full extent of the employee's disability, even though the existence of the disease was then unknown.⁴⁵

g. Failure of Employee to Recover

Where statutory authority therefor exists, as under provisions authorizing such changes as in the opinion of the compensation officials may be justified, the compensation officials may make an additional award when an injured employee does not recover as expected, but a workman after having been granted an award for permanent total disability may not be granted an additional award based on a lesser degree of disability on failure of the injury to heal as expected.

Where statutory authority therefor exists,⁴⁶ as under provisions authorizing such changes as in the opinion of the compensation officials may be justified,⁴⁷ the compensation officials may make an additional award when an injured employee does not recover as expected. The officials are authorized to continue payments awarded, despite subsequent injuries delaying recovery, where the employee is still suffering from the original injury.⁴⁸ However, on failure of an injury to heal as expected, a workman after having been granted an award for permanent total disability may not be granted an additional award based on a lesser degree of disability, such as temporary total disability.⁴⁹ On an application for additional compensation, where the failure to recover is due to the employee's lack of care, the refusal of further compensation is authorized.⁵⁰

h. Injury or Disability Becoming Permanent reach this result, depending on the terms of the particular statute relied on to authorize the additional award, the original award having been based on the theory that the disability was only temporary, some authorities have regarded the permanent disability as a new and further disability,⁵³ others, as an increase of disability,⁵⁴ and still others, as a change of condition.⁵⁵ Again, depending on the terms of the particular statutes applicable, it has been held that a change of condition is not required to authorize the compensation officials to make an award for permanent disability where the only prior award was for temporary disability and there has been no determination of the question of permanent disability,⁵⁶ and that an award for permanent total disability is authorized after an award for temporary total disability and for permanent partial disability, although no change in condition is shown.⁵⁷ To authorize the subsequent award, the permanent disability must be the result of the original injury.⁵⁸

i. Increase of Disability or Further Disability

Where statutory authority therefor exists, in cases where the incapacity of the workman has increased, or his condition is substantially worse, or he has suffered a further disability since the last prior award or order, the compensation authorities may award new or additional compensation provided the increased incapacity, worse condition, or further disability is caused, activated, or superinduced by the original injury.

Claim of permanent total disability

(1) Fact that employee had claimed that he was totally and permanently disabled prior to award for permanent partial disability, did not preclude commission from granting further award, if it believed that an actual change in condition had resulted.

tion for the permanent injury is allowable or has been allowed.⁸⁶

A workman may be entitled to additional compensation because of increased incapacity, even though it is not reflected in lower earnings⁸⁷ or a decrease in earning capacity.⁸⁸ In the case of injury of a specific member, he may be entitled to increased compensation because of increased disability of such member, even though it does not result in increased disability to work or perform labor.⁸⁹ However, as a general rule, an award may not be modified because of increased disability unless the disability causes a decrease in the ability of the workman to labor or perform work,⁹⁰ and an increase in pain and discomfort, by itself, is not enough.⁹¹ Where a workman is able to work at the time an award is made and subsequently becomes unable to work, there is such change of condition as will permit reopening of the award.⁹²

However, where there is no change in the physical condition of the workman, the failure to obtain work is not a basis, it has been held, for additional compensation;⁹³ nor, where an award is based on the permanent partial impairment of a member and there has been no increase in the degree of such impairment, is an additional award justified on a decrease of the employee's earning power.⁹⁴

j. Termination or Decrease of Disability

Where the incapacity of a workman has diminished or ceased, the compensation officials, within the terms of the continuing jurisdiction vested in them, may decrease or terminate compensation, and under particular statutory provisions and subject to the limitations contained therein, they may in a proper case diminish or terminate the original award where the employee returns to work or is able to return to work.

Where the incapacity of the workman, on which an award was based, has diminished⁹⁵ or ceased,⁹⁶ on a substantial change in the employee's condition,⁹⁷ the compensation officials, within the terms of the continuing jurisdiction vested in them by the act, are authorized to reopen the case to determine the degree of disability, if any, and to decrease or terminate the compensation accordingly. So, where the injury has been ameliorated by a surgical operation, the employer or insurer may on application secure a reduction, or, in a proper case, a cessation of compensation.⁹⁸ The modification of the original award is authorized, where the disability has ceased, although affirmed on appeal.⁹⁹ Until the disability is terminated, the officials have no authority to terminate payments before the period of compensation provided for the particular disability in the act has elapsed.¹ Where the condition of claimant has changed and he is entitled to less compensation than that originally awarded, the compensation officials are not authorized to terminate the compensation on the ground that the employee has received more than if the new finding had been made originally,² but should order the compensation decreased for the continuing disability.³

Such termination is authorized, although the inability to work continues, where it is not a proximate result of the injury because of which compensation was originally awarded.⁴ So, if total disability resulting from an accident ceases, the fact that there is no cessation of total disability because the employee, during its continuance, has been totally disabled from an independent supervening cause will not preclude termination of compensation payments on the ground of change of condition.⁵ However, where an employee is totally and permanently disabled as a result of an accident, the fact that he would have become totally and permanently disabled in any event as a result of pre-existing disease will not justify termination of compensation on the ground of a change of condition.⁶

Review of award for permanent total disability

Where statutory authority therefor exists, an award for permanent and terminate the award where the employee is able to return to work.⁸ However, the right of a workman to receive compensation on a rating of permanent partial disability⁹ or permanent total disability¹⁰ is not necessarily defeated by his return to work. The difference in the character of the work prior to the occurrence of the disability as compared to that subsequently performed,¹¹ and differences in the terms of the applicable statutes,¹² must be considered in determining whether a return to work affects the right to continued compensation. Thus, under some statutes the test is whether the workman is still disabled from performing the duties of his original employment, and the fact that he is able to engage in other employment or has secured other employment is of no consequence.¹³ Under other statutes, compensation may be terminated if a workman's earning power, in any kind of work for which he is fitted, is not impaired,¹⁴ and it is immaterial whether or not he is able to do exactly the same kind of work as he did before the injury.¹⁵ However, even under a statute authorizing termination or reduction of compensation when the employee is able to return to any employment, an employee cannot be said to have regained his ability to return to employment unless he is able to perform the duties of whatever employment may be under consideration in the manner that such duties are customarily performed by the average person engaged in such employment.¹⁶ Under the doctrine adopted by some authorities a reduction of compensation payments is not warranted on a mere showing that the workman has the physical capacity to do some kind of work different from the general kind of work which he was engaged in at the time of injury, but it must also be shown that the workman, either by his own effort or that of his employer, can actually get such work.¹⁷

varies.²² So, where there has been no material decrease in a workman's incapacity since an award, the mere fact that he has secured employment at wages higher than he received before injury does not entitle the employer or his insurer to a reduction of the award.²³ However, under some statutes, in a proper case, an increase in an employee's actual wages may afford a basis for a reduction,²⁴ termination,²⁵ or suspension²⁶ of the compensation previously awarded. So, after a schedule award, where statutory authority therefor exists, in a proper case, a further award may be made for reduced earnings.²⁷

Change in earning capacity. The earning capacity of the employee is to be distinguished from the actual wages earned.²⁸ In a proper case where statutory authority therefor exists, an award may be modified, increased, or decreased as the circumstances warrant, on a showing that the earning capacity of the workman has increased²⁹ or de-ly defeated by workman's receipt of wages.

"Change of condition"

Where injured workman who had been earning $23 per week was allowed $5.04 per week as thirty per cent partial permanent disability, but thereafter obtained work at salary of $26.80 per week, there was a "change of condition" since award, within terms of statute requiring reduction of weekly allowance to sixty per cent of difference between former and latter weekly wage.

N.C.—Smith v. Swift & Co., 194 S. E. 106, 212 N.C. 608.

Basis of determining change

Where it was determined by parties in accordance with compensation act that average weekly wages of employee, whose pay was 98 cents an hour for ordinary working hours and time and one half for overtime work, were $45.18, including pay for overtime work, and, when employee returned to work, he was given lighter work because partially incapacitated, but he was paid at rate of 98 cents an hour, and because of elimination of overtime work his average weekly wage was only $39.20, trial justice erred as a matter of law in deciding that there was no change in weekly wages, and erred in granting employer's petition to terminate compensation payments of $20.00 per week and should have awarded compensation of $3.59 a week.

Necessary implication of statute

A provision fixing compensation for partial disability at certain per cent of difference between wages of employee when injured and employee's earning power thereafter, by necessary implication, intended a suspension of payments during periods when physical disability is not reflected in loss of earnings.

Pa.—Kelemon v. Reiber, 53 A.2d 903, 161 Pa.Super. 169.

Amount of disability not fixed

Under provision basing payments for partial disability on difference between former wages and subsequent earning power, and providing that "earning power" should not be less than subsequent earnings, receipt thereafter of equivalent wages removes claimant from compensation rolls while receiving such wages, but does not fix amount of disability or loss of earning power, and does not affect burden of proof.

Pa.—Holtz v. McGraw & Bindley, 54 A.2d 905, 161 Pa.Super. 371.

Wages not actually earned

An employer and insurance carrier were not entitled to suspension of compensation award on ground that employer continued to pay injured employee same salary as he had earned before accident, in view of finding supported by competent evidence that employee since accident had not actually earned wages he was receiving through generosity of his employer.

Determination of earning capacity

(1) Wages equal to or exceeding earnings before disability are not conclusive against loss of earning power.

Pa.—Iyrne v. Progress Plate Making Co., 43 A.2d 566, 158 Pa.Super. 51.

(2) Employee's earning capacity after injury and on application to reduce or stop compensation is not determinable by mere temporary employment at high wages until after an order stopping compensation may be obtained, or measurable by what employee actually earned in non-descript employment which is not steady, but is measured by injured employee's capacity to earn wages in same or another employment.

(3) So, it has been held that wages paid to an injured welder for light work during an unusual wartime demand for welders did not conclusive-creased³⁰ since the prior award, without a showing of a change in the physical condition of the workman.³¹ However, under some statutes changes in earning power or industrial worth do not afford a basis for modifying an award;³² and the employer and his insurance carrier are not entitled to a reduction of compensation because the workman has, during the period of rehabilitation contemplated by the act, increased his earning power through study and training.³³ Under a statute so providing, in the case of compensation for permanent total disability, payments therefor cease after a statutory period unless the employee submits to such physical or educational rehabilitation as may be ordered by a rehabilitation commission and can show that because of such disability it is impossible for him to obtain earnings equal to those earned at the time of the accident, in which case further payments shall be made during the period of such disability, the amount thereof to be the previous weekly compensation payment diminished by that portion thereof that the earnings he is then able to earn bears to the wages received at the time of the accident.³⁴

Expectancy of increased wages of minor. Under a statute providing that if the employee was a minor when injured, and that under normal conditions his wages would be expected to increase, that fact may be considered in arriving at his average weekly wages, the compensation officials may under their continuing jurisdiction to modify an award increase an award on the basis of the expectancy of increased wages of the employee.³⁵

Award for total incapacity

(1) "Incapacity," into which court may inquire in proceeding to modify award of compensation for total incapacity on ground of increase or decrease of injured employee's incapacity, is incapacity due solely to violence to physical structure of employee's body as result of accident and relates to his physical condition, not his earning power and industrial worth.

Neb.—Ludwickson v. Central States Elec. Co., supra.

(2) Where claimant suffered injuries necessitating amputation of about one-half of all fingers, and award for permanent total disability provided for readjustment in event of vocational rehabilitation, commission was not justified ten years later in changing award to one of permanent partial disability, although claimant had allegedly earned a substantial living for last two years.

Or.—Hoffmeister v. State Indus. Acc. Commission, 156 P.2d 834, 176 Or. 216.

Permanent partial impairment

Increase or decrease in injured employee's earning power would afford no basis for modifying award for permanent partial impairment on theory of changed condition, since such award was intended to cover all disability arising therefrom, whether total or partial.

Wages in different occupation

Under statute providing that if employee was of such age and experience when injured that under natural conditions his wages would be expected to increase, that fact may be considered in determining his weekly wages for compensation purposes, injured employee who was paid total incapacity compensation based on average weekly wage but thereafter was able to earn more in a different occupation although he had suffered loss of one eye was not entitled to award of further compensation on basis of increased weekly wages, on theory that if he was able to earn more under unnatural conditions, that is, with loss of vision of one eye, he would have been able to earn more under natural conditions, since "wages" as used in statute must be taken to refer to wages earned in particular employment out of which injury arose, and not those in other occupations, so that fact that he was able to earn more in another occupation could not be given any weight on his application for increased compensation.

m. Refusal to Submit to Surgical or Medical Treatment

Refusal of an employee to undergo a reasonable surgical operation or accept treatment may be urged by application to review or terminate compensation; but a statute authorizing the reduction or suspension of monthly payments because of such refusal has been held not to prevent recovery of an additional lump sum award based on increased permanent disability.

Refusal of the employee to undergo a reasonable surgical operation may be urged by an application to review or terminate compensation;³⁶ and so of refusal to accept treatment;³⁷ but the denial of a reduction of compensation on the ground that the existing disability is caused or aggravated by an unreasonable refusal to accept proper medical treatment is authorized where there has not been a sufficient tender of such treatment;³⁸ where an injured employee interrogated before the arbitrator offered to undergo the operation at the employer's expense, and the offer was ignored, the employer cannot, on review, ask diminution of the award for total disability on the ground that the employee may eventually be cured.³⁹ Provisions authorizing the reduction or suspension of monthly payments on the workman's refusal to submit to such medical or surgical treatment as is reasonably essential to his recovery do not, however, prevent recovery of an additional lump sum award based on increased permanent disability.⁴⁰

Examination. Where statutory authority therefor exists, the compensation officials may suspend compensation on the workman's refusal, without reasonable cause or excuse, to submit to a medical examination.⁴¹

n. Refusal to Accept Employment

On an injured employee's refusal of work, provided it is suitable and has actually been procured, the compensation officials are generally authorized to reduce or terminate further compensation, but provisions for termination of compensation if the employee refuses to accept suitable employment have been held not to apply to an award for permanent partial impairment compensated under a schedule.

On an injured employee's refusal of work, provided it is suitable⁴² and has been actually procured,⁴³ the compensation officials, under the provision investing them with a continuing jurisdiction, are generally authorized to reduce or terminate further compensation.⁴⁴ Where the compensation acts permit the employer to terminate or reduce compensation on claimant's refusal to accept suitable employment offered by the employer, where an employee is disabled and is offered other suitable work by his employer, he must accept it⁴⁵ and make a reasonable effort to perform it,⁴⁶ and he cannot insist on being put back in the same employment in which he was injured⁴⁷ or at exactly the same wage,⁴⁸ but the employment offered must be similar to that which he previously had⁴⁹ and suitable

p. Departure from Jurisdiction, State, or Country

Where authorized by statute, on departure of the claimant from the jurisdiction, state, or country, the compensation officials may reduce or terminate compensation payments.

Where under certain provisions of the act, such as a requirement that a compensation claimant leaving the state must notify compensation officials and obtain permission to do so or lose his compensation during his absence,⁵⁹ or that an alien who becomes a nonresident shall lose a certain percentage of,⁶⁰ or all,⁶¹ compensation, or under other provisions, such as a requirement that the beneficiary report for a physical examination or suffer the suspension or loss of compensation,⁶² compensation officials are authorized to terminate or reduce payments where the beneficiary leaves the country or state, or they may do so in a proper case. However, in the absence of a statute otherwise providing, removal of claimant from the jurisdiction of the court making the award or from the state is not a ground for review or modification of a compensation award.⁶³

Where statutory authority therefor exists, an award of compensation may be modified or terminated, in a proper case, on the death⁶⁴ or marriage⁶⁵ of the beneficiary. This may be done, in the event of marriage, although the marriage is not valid for all purposes and is at most only one at common law.⁶⁶ However, the marriage of a dependent, where such dependency is not expressly terminated by the marriage under the act, does not authorize the termination of compensation as on a change of condition under the continuing jurisdiction of the officials.⁶⁷

i. Error or Mistake

Under some statutory provisions a compensation award may be reviewed on the ground of error or mistake, or, more specifically, if there has been a mistake in a determination of fact; but where the exercise of the power of review is conditional on a change in the claimant's condition, mistake is not a ground for reviewing an award.

vision investing compensation officials with a continuing jurisdiction over their awards and the power to alter them on "good cause," an award may be modified on the ground of a mistake of law;⁷² but, where the exercise of the power to review and alter a previous award is conditional on a change in claimant's condition, mistake is not a ground for reviewing an award.⁷³

Adjudication of loss of use of foot mistakenly made

If, subsequent to adjudications of permanent loss of use of compensation claimant's foot, it developed that those adjudications were wrong because use of foot was not permanently lost, payments made to claimant were mistakenly made and it would become duty of referee to re-examine case from beginning and determine when claimant's total disability became partial and extent of partial disability and to ascertain whether claimant had been paid in full for his disability.

the compensation officials may, from time to time, make such modification or change with respect to former awards, as in their opinion may be just, an award for an incorrect or inadequate amount may be reopened.⁷⁶ More specifically, under such statute the case may be reopened if there has been some new development which shows the former award to be inadequate or excessive.⁷⁷ Under a statute providing that if after an award "it shall afterwards develop" that claimant is or was entitled to a higher rate of compensation, he shall receive such higher rate, the quoted words include disclosure of errors of law in connection with the award, and are not limited to changes in physical condition.⁷⁸

§ 855. Nature and Form of Proceedings

In general, while a proceeding to modify an award is not a new proceeding, but is one based on the jurisdiction of the tribunal acquired in the original proceeding, it is different and distinct from proceedings for rehearing or appeal. The procedure set forth in the statutes must be followed.

As a general rule, a proceeding to modify an award is not a new proceeding,⁷⁹ but is one based on the jurisdiction of the board⁸⁰ or court⁸¹ acquired in the original proceeding. It is a continuation⁸² or a reopening⁸³ of the original proceeding. The party seeking a modification does not proceed by an original application for an award.⁸⁴

Rehearings or appeals distinguished. On the other hand, a statutory proceeding to modify, suspend, or terminate an award because of a change of disability, or disability or dependency, is different and distinct from the statutory proceeding for the rehearing of the claim or for appeal from the award apart from changed conditions, if any,⁸⁵ since, while a petition or application to open or

Petition for increase by reason of increased disability is not remedy where award of compensation for partial disability is too low.

Period of increased compensation

Under statute referred to in text, use of word "was" in phrase "is or was entitled to a higher rate of compensation" indicates that period during which a claimant may be entitled to increased compensation includes time between injury and earlier award and negatives idea that increased compensation must be laid to a change in physical conditions since prior award.

Petitions distinguished

Employee's petition for compensation for disability continuing after termination of award allowed by Supreme Court in prior opinion was held not "petition for review" within act, especially where employee did not seek to have reviewed any matters determined by supreme court under previous petition.

R.I.—Bernier v. Narragansett Elec. Co., 186 A. 479, 56 R.I. 438.

Mutually exclusive remedies

The remedies provided for by statute authorizing workmen's compensation board to modify, reinstate, suspend, or terminate an award upon petition and proof of change of disability or dependency within one year from date of last payment of compensation, or to review and modify an agreement if it be proved materially incorrect, and statute authorizing board to grant a rehearing within one year from date of an award, are mutually exclusive.

review a compensation award because of changed conditions is of necessity predicated on the original judgment or award,⁸⁶ the proceeding initiated thereby is essentially a new proceeding based on a new factual situation.⁸⁷ Thus, while the remedy of a claimant who is dissatisfied with an award, and whose condition has not changed, is by an appeal, and not by a petition for a recovery for increased disability,⁸⁸ an employee whose condition has changed is not, by the taking of such an appeal, deprived of the right to proceed by petition for compensation for augmented incapacity.⁸⁹

Where a claimant who is not satisfied with an award for an injury suffered subsequently has another accident and suffers an aggravation of the original injury, he must pursue two remedies.⁹⁰ His remedy, in so far as he is dissatisfied with the original award and seeks greater compensation for the original injury, unchanged, is by petition for rehearing, and appeal;⁹¹ and his remedy for the injury as aggravated by the later accident must be by a new and separate claim based solely on the later injury.⁹²

Procedure generally. Where the manner in which awards may be modified is specified in the act, the procedure set forth must be followed,⁹³ and no change in an award may be made except in the manner so provided.⁹⁴ Since such proceedings are informal,⁹⁵ procedural niceties need not be strictly adhered to,⁹⁶ although substantive requirements must be fulfilled.⁹⁷ The general practice of the courts need not be followed in such proceedings before a board.⁹⁸

Effect of application; several applications. An application for an award based on changed conditions does not constitute an abandonment of the original application⁹⁹ since the later application does not supersede the original application for compensation.¹ A claimant may make more than one application for the modification of a compensation

b. Statutes expressly prescribing limitations

a. Time for Application in General

In general, except for statutes expressly prescribing limitations, proceedings to increase, decrease, or terminate compensation may be brought any time within the period for which compensation is allowable for the particular injury, while the commission still has jurisdiction of the matter, general limitation provisions and provisions as to original compensation claims being inapplicable; under some statutes an application may not be made until the elapse of a specified time after the award.

In general, except in so far as there may be applicable statutory provisions expressly specifying some other time within which a proceeding to increase, decrease, or terminate compensation under a prior award must be instituted, as discussed infra subdivision b of this section, such a proceeding may, subject to the application of the doctrine of laches,⁵ be instituted at any time⁶ within the period for which compensation is allowable⁷ for the particular injury sustained,⁸ that is, the period for which compensation would have been allowable had the present condition of the claimant existed at the time of the original award,⁹ or until the claimant has received good faith and integrity of claim and properly may be considered by department of labor and industry in passing on claim in connection with other evidence, but once department takes jurisdiction of injury it retains it to end of compensable period to award such compensation as statute and facts warrant.

"Condition of claimant" construed

The phrase "condition of claimant" is used in the section of the compensation act providing that industrial commission's jurisdiction to reopen any cause on an application based on change in condition "shall extend for the maximum period of time measured by the number of weeks for which compensation could have been awarded by the Commission had the condition of claimant existed at the time original award was made thereon," refers to the nature and extent of his disability, attributable to the original injury, on the date of the filing of the motion to reopen. Allowable period for total permanent disability

Where application by compensation claimant for reopening of compensation proceeding was filed after expiration of three hundred and thirty-five weeks for which compensation had been awarded for partial, permanent disability, but application came within period for which compensation might then have been allowed or justified for total, permanent disability, and at the time the maximum period for which compensation was allowable was ten years after date of injury or a maximum sum of seven thousand five hundred dollars was allowable, application was within statutory period. Where employer and employee had complied with awards for disability and, under the last award, payments for partial disability were made and accepted until expiration of five hundred-week period, the department was without authority to award additional compensation for total disability during a part of the five hundred-week period upon employee's petition filed after such period had expired and a showing that total disability existed during a part of the time for which payments for partial disability had been received.

Eleven years

Where injured employee was paid compensation for injury in 1938 the jurisdiction of the compensation commission was not divested by employee's resumption of lighter work and the abatement of compensation during such employment but continued so that the commission had jurisdiction to review petition for further compensation filed in 1949.

there are special circumstances.¹⁸ However, in the absence of provision to that effect, the commission has the power to reopen a compensation cause, and award additional compensation, even though the term of the prior award, that is, the period for which compensation had previously been awarded, has not expired.¹⁹ A petition for review of an award for a change of condition may be dismissed if it is prematurely brought.²⁰

Applicability of limitations on original claims. In general, the application to increase, decrease, or terminate compensation under a prior award, not being an original proceeding, as discussed supra § 855, is not affected by the provisions of the act fixing the time within which original proceedings for compensation or death must be instituted,²¹ and such proceeding need not be instituted within the time required of original claims.²²

Applicability of general limitation period. A

limitation provision in the code applicable to modification of judgments generally does not apply to a proceeding to modify an award under the compensation act.²³ Certainly, such an action or proceeding is not barred by the statutes of limitation applicable to actions generally.²⁴ However, it has been held, by analogy to the general statute of limitation, that claimant will not be allowed to recover for a period prior to the filing of the petition longer than the period specified by the general statute,²⁵ so that claimant may recover for as much of the unexpired compensable period as falls within statutory period prior to the filing of the petition.²⁶

Claims for other injuries. The petition for increased disability may include injuries resulting from the same accident which had not been alleged in the original claim petition, even though the statute of limitations period for original claims had expired,²⁷ at least if the matters for which the ad-

Exceptional cases

In exceptional cases, the court of appeal may reserve to defendant in compensation suit right to reopen proceedings immediately, rather than waiting for statutory period of six months from finality of judgment of court of appeal; and where original injury was trivial, and prolongation of disability was partially due to disuse of injured hand by employee and, with reasonable effort toward rehabilitation, disability should disappear or be greatly minimized within relatively short period, which in fact should have expired at time of trial, plaintiff would be awarded compensation for temporary total compensation disability for certain period, and both parties would have right to reopen proceedings at once to prove duration or extent of continuing disability beyond date allowed.

20. Petition held not subject to dismissal

Petition for review of an award filed by an employee while in the army although he had no present claim for compensation, but filed to protect any possible claim he might have after discharge, was not subject to dismissal as premature where such action neither deprived the employer of any substantial rights, prevented it from making its defense, nor caused it to suffer any injustice. Neurological disability

Workmen's compensation claimant who had been given partial permanent orthopedic disability was not barred from later claiming for neurological disability by her failure to include claim therefor in first claim, regardless of whether she proceeded on theory that neurosis developed since first award or that it existed at time of first award but had since increased.

N.J.—Florak v. Board of Ed., City of Newark, 87 A.2d 381, 18 N.J.Super. 425.

Same trauma, new effect

Where workmen's compensation claimant was awarded partial permanent disability and subsequently made claim for increase in disability based on a different injury, the allegation of disability in second petition would not be new and distinct cause of action barred by two-year statutory limitation period but merely a new and distinct effect or injury flowing from the same trauma.

ditional compensation was awarded were unknown at the time the original award was made.²⁸ However, in other jurisdictions a claim for another injury sustained at the outset is an original claim, although not considered in or covered by a prior award, and is barred if not filed within the time required for the filing of an original claim.²⁹ In still other jurisdictions the rule is that an injury which existed and was known at the time of the original proceeding is within the limitations period for the original claim, since it is not a new or changed condition;³⁰ and, where a claimant, at the time an award is made for accidental injuries, knows of injuries other than those for which he is being compensated, and exercises his judgment as to the seriousness of such other injuries, and neglects to give notice thereof or assert a claim therefor within the statutory period, he cannot thereafter recover for such undisclosed injuries.³¹ Certainly, a claim for an injury not related to the injury for which an award has been made must be made within the time required for original claims;³² and in the case of a loss or loss of use of an organ or member in a second accident, after a similar loss in a prior accident, the claim therefor must be made within the statutory period for original claims generally, notwithstanding provision is made for special payments in such circumstances.³³

b. Statutes Expressly Prescribing Limitations

- (1) General considerations
- (2) Limitation provisions
- (3) Tolling of statute

(1) General Considerations

Statutes expressly prescribing limitations on the institution of proceedings to modify an award are frequently limitations on the jurisdiction of the board or commission. Authorities differ on whether the statutes may operate retroactively.

Where statutes expressly provide for the making of applications for an increase, decrease, termination, or reinstatement of compensation under a prior award within a time specified, such limitation is generally a limitation on the jurisdiction of the compensation board or commission, and there must be a compliance with the statutes in this respect or the application cannot be entertained,³⁴ except in so far condition of claimant's left hand until July, 1933, industrial commission did not abuse its discretion in thereafter denying claimant's application for modification of award sought on ground that, at time of injury to right arm, her left hand was of no industrial value and that therefore she had been permanently and totally disabled since date of injury to right arm.

An injured employee, who, after being awarded compensation and more than two years after the original injury, filed an application for modification of the award in order to secure compensation for subsequently developing disability directly caused by injury sustained in the original accident but not described in the original application was not barred of his right to continue to participate in the state insurance fund by the section of the compensation act prescribing that claims for compensation for injuries are barred unless application is made to the industrial commission within two years after the injury.

Employee who had suffered total loss of vision of left eye was held not entitled to recover special additional compensation for permanent total disability through total loss of vision of right eye, where employee filed no claim for compensation under second accident until more than two years thereafter, since such special payments are "compensation" in addition to schedule compensation for second disability, and claim therefor must be filed within statutory time.

Claims or applications held timely

Where both claimant's original and amended application for workmen's compensation were filed within three years after injury, and amended application was treated by employer, compensation carrier and chairman of Alaska Industrial board as request for an increased rate of compensation over that then in effect, claimant made timely claim for increased compensation even though claim was not filed subsequent to decision establishing the lower rate of compensation. U.S.—Alaska Indus. Bd. v. Chugach Elec. Ass'n, C.A.Alaska, 245 F.2d 855, reversed on other grounds 78 S.Ct. 735, 356 U.S. 320, 2 L.Ed.2d 795.

Cases held not within exceptions

(1) Under statute authorizing the workmen's compensation board to entertain applications to reopen claims more than seven years after accident, except where claim had been disallowed after a trial on merits, or other disposition of claim without an award after party had been given due notice of hearings, where in one case issue of employee's causal relationship was presented, contested, and decided adversely to claimant, and in another case claimant had been given due notice for four scheduled hearings and he failed to appear at any or press claim, workmen's compensation board had no jurisdiction to entertain application to reopen these claims, made thirteen and eleven years after date of injuries.

(2) Where workmen's compensation case had been closed without an award for nonappearance of claimant, the workmen's compensation board had no jurisdiction to grant a reopening, and could not make an award against special fund for reopened cases ten years after original accident because of claimed continuing disability.

N.Y.—Bouchhaart v. Interstate Motor Freight System, 144 N.Y.S.2d 866, 286 App.Div. 1044.

(3) Where claimant, who was injured in 1929, was paid compensation to 1934, at which time compensation board approved lump-sum settlement and case was closed, and case was reopened in 1943, and board found that claimant had suffered further accidental injuries while working for other employers, and that latter were responsible for fifty per cent of claimant's total disability, award of compensation for the other fifty per cent, which was assessed against special fund for reopened cases, more than eighteen years after date of injury and more than eight years from date of last compensation payment was improper.

N.Y.—Likepittles v. Donner Steel Co., 106 N.Y.S.2d 146, 273 App.Div. 443.

Cases held within exceptions

(1) Under statutes prohibiting reopening of workmen's compensation case against special fund after lapse of seven years from date of injury or death if claim has been disallowed after trial on merits, but permitting liability of fund if claim has been previously disallowed or otherwise disposed of without award in any other manner, where employee filed claim almost eight years after injury and claim was dismissed by referee on ground that it was barred by statute of limitations, such dismissal was not "disallowance after trial on merits" and award could be made for injury.

N.Y.—Ennis v. Kennedy Valve Mfg. Co., 125 N.Y.S.2d 535, 282 App.Div. 971.

(2) Where claimant was injured in January 1934 and an award was made for three and one half weeks disability ending June 18, 1934, case was closed on September 5, 1935 and case was reopened February 27, 1942, statute regarding continuing jurisdiction of workmen's compensation board and imposing limitation was not applicable since award was made at earlier hearing, and, therefore, award payable from special fund for reopened cases was proper.

N.Y.—Antoniazzi v. City of New York, 75 N.Y.S.2d 917, 273 App.Div. 835.

(3) Reopening of compensation case after death of deceased employee's father, nine years after award was made to father and notice of award had been marked closed, and allowing compensation to employee's mother at rate previously paid to father, was not abuse of discretion.

N.Y.—McNeill v. New York Power & Light Corp., 292 N.Y.S. 604, 249 App.Div. 835.

(4) Payment from special fund for reopened cases generally see supra § 837.

Case closing held interlocutory, not final

Where accident happened in 1939, but case was reopened in 1945, and its closure on Jan. 15, 1947, by a referee was only an interlocutory determination subject to review by the compensation board, case was not definitely closed on that date so as to preclude award.

istrative officials to reopen claims on their own motion even after the expiration of the stated period.³⁸

Applicability of statutes; retroactivity. While it has been held that the statutes of limitation as to the right to modify an award are substantive in nature and not retroactive,³⁹ so that the period of limitation applicable to a particular application to modify a compensation award depends on the provisions of the statute in effect at the time the original compensation claim accrued,⁴⁰ or during the continuance of the right under such statutes,⁴¹ it has also been held that such limitation is procedural in character, so that it may be retroactive in its operation,⁴² or that, even though it is not procedural, it may operate as to an existing disability at the time of its enactment.⁴³

Liberal construction for claimant. It has been held that the provisions relating to limitations of time during which further awards can be made should be given a liberal construction in favor of the claimant.⁴⁴

Circumvention of statutes by board or commission. Where by the statute the board is given continuing jurisdiction to modify its awards without any time restrictions for the making of applications therefor, the board is without power to deprive itself of such jurisdictions by providing in any award that application for a modification thereof must be

Compensation claims accruing under 1935 compensation act should be made as therein provided and applications to modify may be made within two years from date of injury and if claim accrues after effective date of 1941 act, then applications to modify should be made at any time prior to one year after date of last payment.

Period shortened by amendment

A petition filed after 1939, to set aside a final compensation receipt executed in 1938, was not governed by 1937 provision in workmen's compensation act allowing six hundred weeks from date of injury to file such petition, but was governed by 1939 amendment to provision limiting time for filing such petition to two years after execution of final receipt, and hence petition was filed too late, notwithstanding receipt was given before effective date of 1939 amendment.

Statute held not one of nonclaim

The statute imposing a three-year limitation on claim of injured workman for aggravation of injuries is not a statute of nonclaim so as to destroy workman's right when the time period elapses, but is only remedial, and hence amendment thereof providing a five-year limitation on such claims does not deny due process.

Wash.—Lane v. Department of Labor and Industries, 151 P.2d 440, 21 Wash.2d 420.

Claims barred under former statute

Claims of injured workmen, for compensation for aggravation of injuries for which they had previously received awards, could properly be brought under the act providing a five-year limitation for such claims after establishment of right to compensation and amending previous act providing for three-year limitations for such claims, where claims were timely brought under later act, notwithstanding claims were barred by the three-year limitation period when the later act became effective which operated retroactively.

Sufficiency of time since enactment

Where act, which required workmen's compensation claimants to file claim for aggravation within five years after termination of compensation, became effective June 6, 1951, and was approved by governor on March 13, 1951, claimant whose claim had been closed June 28, 1946, had reasonable time in which to file claim in view of fact that time should be computed from day when new law was passed and not from time when it took effect.

made within a specified time.⁴⁵ Conversely, a board, bureau, or commission cannot undertake to forestall or circumvent the statutory provisions limiting the time within which an award may be reviewed for a change in conditions,⁴⁶ as by undertaking to retain or reserve jurisdiction for a specified time pending future developments.⁴⁷

Original proceeding not determined. Where the original proceeding has never been finally determined, the proceeding to increase or modify the award therein, because of a change of condition, is not barred by the statutory period of limitation on such proceeding.⁴⁸ On the other hand, where a claimant had not commenced the original proceeding within the proper time therefor, and no compensation had been paid or agreed to, he cannot make an application for new and further disability, under the time limitations applicable to such an application.⁴⁹

Waiver. The bar of the statute requiring an application for an increase, diminution, or termination of compensation to be made within a specified period may be waived,⁵⁰ and the right to object to a late filing of the application may be lost by waiver where the necessary elements of waiver are present.⁵¹ In some of the jurisdictions requiring the proceedings to be instituted within a specified time, a failure to plead limitations as a defense,⁵² or to present the defense to the commission before the submission of the cause,⁵³ constitutes a waiver thereof. However, it has also been held that the question whether the proceeding was too late is present throughout the entire proceeding, so that the court may pass on it, even though it is not specifically raised in the pleadings.⁵⁴

Amendment of application. In any event, where an application for additional compensation, or otherwise to modify an award, is timely filed, an amendment thereof may be allowed after the expiration of the period of limitation, where the amendment makes no substantive change in the action as timely instituted.⁵⁵

46. Holding petition in abeyance

Workmen's compensation bureau was not justified in holding in abeyance a petition filed by disabled employee for purpose of forestalling statutory two years limitation of time for filing of petition for further benefits after employer's last payment of weekly compensation for temporary and total permanent disability, since bureau has no power to delete statutory limitation of time for compensation petition.

Where claim had never reached final hearing and neither permanent disability nor disfigurement had ever been considered, but insurance carrier, without seeking permission of industrial commission and without notice to claimant, closed its file after last payment of compensation for temporary total disability, proceedings to secure further compensation instituted more than a year after the last payment were not barred.

Letters from employers' compensation insurance carrier to deceased employee's widow, stating merely that carrier was forwarding to deputy compensation commissioner request for permission to suspend further payments of death benefits awarded widow until dissolution of her prior marriage to another than such employee could be established, was too vague to constitute intentional relinquishment of known right, as required to waive statutory one-year limitation of time for filing of widow's application to reopen case on showing of annulment of prior marriage.

Inclusion of citation of regulation

In workmen's compensation proceeding for additional compensation for violation of a specific safety requirement, where application for an additional award was filed within time limited by statute but erroneously referred to specific regulations which did not become effective until after happening of accident, there was no abuse of discretion in allowing amendment of application after expiration of two-year limitation period so as to include citation to effective specific safety requirement which was almost identical in wording with later previously cited regulation.

Ohio.—State ex rel. Allied Wheel Products, Inc. v. Industrial Commission, supra.

Relation back of amendment

Where claimant seeking to have workmen's compensation case reopened was given time to obtain proper medical report to present with his application, and he presented such report and made it a part of his application to reopen, obtaining and filing of report amounted to no more than an amendment of his application; and the amendment, having in no manner changed claim, or relief requested, related back to date of filing of application.

(2) Limitation Provisions

Statutes expressly providing a period of limitation within which a proceeding for an increase, decrease, or termination of compensation under a prior award may be instituted, vary widely as to period of limitation, when the period begins to run, and in other respects.

Under statutes expressly providing a period of limitation within which a proceeding for an increase, decrease, or termination of compensation under a prior award may be instituted, the period of limitation and the time when it begins to run varies with the terms of the applicable statute.⁵⁶ Thus, depending on the particular statute, a proceeding to increase compensation because of changed conditions or other grounds must be instituted within a specified time after the last payment of compensation,⁵⁷ generally one year,⁵⁸ two years,⁵⁹ or three years;⁶⁰ or within a specified period from the date the board is notified of the final payment of the claim;⁶¹ or within a specified period from the date

Date of notification, not of payment itself, as controlling

(1) Under statute authorizing Board of Workmen's Compensation to review any award or settlement made between parties and filed with Board within two years from date that Board is notified of final payment of claim, notification of final payment, and not payment itself, is date from which two-year statute of limitations commences to run.

Ga.—Kirkland v. Employers Liability Assur. Corp., 25 S.E.2d 723, 69 Ga.App. 433.

Notice to adversary held unnecessary

Under statute authorizing Industrial Board to review any award or settlement made between parties and filed with board within two years from date that board is notified of final payment of the claim, "notice" to the board of final payment of the claim satisfied requirements of statute without giving notice thereof to claimant; and even if statute required that notice of final payment of claim be given to claimant when given to the board, claimant would have no ground to complain because of insurance carrier's failure to give him such notice, where it appeared that claimant had knowledge of all transactions with respect to final payment of the claim.

Ga.—Kirkland v. Employers Liability Assur. Corp., supra.

Notice of employee's refusal to sign receipt

Where Workmen's Compensation Board ordered sums agreed upon between employer and employee paid during disability and provided for modification of award in case of loss of use of member, and employer notified board of employee's refusal to sign final settlement receipt on returning to work, employee could within two years of notice apply to board for review on ground of change in condition.

64. Wyo.—Mustanen v. Diamond Coal & Coke Co., 62 P.2d 287, 50 Wyo. 462.

65. Voluntary character of payments as immaterial

Statute providing that claim for additional workmen's compensation shall be barred unless filed with workmen's compensation commission one year from date of last payment of compensation or two years from date of accident, whichever is greater, is not limited to the filing of the claim when voluntary payments of compensation have been made as distinguished from payments made as a result of an award or order of the commission after hearing, but is clearly applicable to claim for additional compensation in cases where compensation for disability has been paid on account of injury.

Ark.—Reynolds Metals Co. v. Brumley, 290 S.W.2d 211, 226 Ark. 388.

Conflict or ambiguity between statutes

If statute providing for modification of award by workmen's compensation commission within six months after termination of compensation period fixed in original compensation order is statute of limitations, there is sufficient ambiguity between such statute and other statute providing that claim for additional compensation shall be barred unless filed with commission within one year from date of last payment of compensation or two years from date of accident and in view of such doubt the latter statute would be controlling.

Ark.—Reynolds Metals Co. v. Brumley, supra.

Payment not considered or ordered

Under statute permitting commission on ground of change in employee's condition within six years of date of accident where no compensation had been paid, or within

in a stated period from the last payment made, or from the date of the injury in cases in which no compensation was ever awarded;⁶⁷ within a specified time from the date of the first final award of compensation to the claimant,⁶⁸ or, if there has been no such award, within the specified time of the order allowing the claim.⁶⁹ Under a statute to that effect, the proceeding must be brought within a specified period from the time the employee knows, or is charged with knowledge, that his condition has materially changed and that there has been a substantial increase in his disability.⁷⁰

Under some statutes, expressly excepting cases of eye injuries from the rule,⁷¹ an award can be reviewed or modified only during the time the award has to run, if for a definite period,⁷² and only if a petition therefor is filed with the board within a stated period after the date of the most recent payment of compensation made prior to the filing of the petition.⁷³ Under other statutes a distinction is drawn between awards designated as final awards and other awards, the limitation applicable to the final awards being determined from the date of the award,⁷⁴ while as to other awards the period begins to run from the date of the payment of the last award, so that the time will not begin to run so long as it remains unpaid;⁷⁵ and a distinction is made between awards generally and awards in occupational disease cases.⁷⁶ Under some provisions the applicable period of limitations may depend on whether the permanent impairment, for which compensation is sought subsequent to the original award, existed at the time of such award or resulted later as a change in conditions.⁷⁷

two years from the date the last payment becomes due and payable, to review a compensation award and award further compensation, a payment of compensation cannot be "due and payable" within the statute when it never has been considered or ordered by the commission; and limitation period did not begin to run on date on which last payment for permanent disability would have been made if there had been continuous monthly payments during the period of time covered by the final award, but began to run on the date on which the commission ordered retroactively the payment of compensation weekly until the full amount had been paid.

Purpose of provision

Clear purpose of amendatory statute providing that application for increased compensation for aggravation of injuries must be filed within two years from date of first final award of compensation, or, if there has been no such award, within two years of order allowing claim, was to provide relief in cases in which there had been aggravation of injury resulting in disability but there had been no previous compensation for time lost.

74. Award held final within provision

Awards determining claim for compensation and after payment of which final settlement receipt was required were "final awards" within statute requiring application for modification of final award to be made within one year, as against contention that there were no final awards to be closed within one year because statute extending time to three years defines final award as award so designated by Commission. 75. Md.—Porter v. Bethlehem-Fairfield Shipyard, 53 A.2d 668, 188 Md. 668.

76. Award held not final within provision

Where initial compensation award made to claimant for temporary partial disability resulting from occupational disease was not designated as final, one-year limitation on applications to compensation board for modification or change in final award and three-year limitation to awards not designated as final did not apply to application made within three-year period.

Statement of distinction

If a permanent partial impairment for which claim is made is direct result of accident, the claim may be filed within two years after accident as an original action, but if

Reclassification. Where the act in providing for a reclassification of a disability by the board specifies a time within which such reclassification may be had,⁷⁸ such reclassification must be made within the required time or else it is unauthorized; and⁷⁹ to be affected by the limitation provision the award must involve a reclassification of disability⁸⁰ theretofore classified.⁸¹ The waiver of an objection to delayed reclassification does not preclude an attack on a subsequent award based on a new determination covering a later period.⁸²

Special provisions as to permanent disability claims. In some jurisdictions the limitation period on a claim for permanent disability does not begin to run until a determination has been made by the commission of the existence or nonexistence of permanent disability,⁸³ on the ground that the statutory limitation applies only to the reopening of a cause for a change of condition, and hence is not applicable to an award for permanent partial disability where the only award theretofore made was for temporary total disability, since it is not necessary to prove a change of condition to sustain a subsequent award for permanent partial disability;⁸⁴ and an award for permanent disability can be entered at any time, without limit, if there has been no former award therefor.⁸⁵ Thus, an order requiring payments to be made for a temporary disability does not start the running of limitations as to a subsequent claim of permanent disability;⁸⁶ nor do payments made pursuant to such order,⁸⁷ or payments voluntarily made prior to the entry of the original compensation award.⁸⁸

Under some statutes setting up a period of limitation computed from the date of the last payment, a distinction is drawn between temporary disability and permanent disability, a different period of time being established for each.⁸⁹

the impairment is the result of a temporary disability it must be filed within one year after final payment for temporary disability, as a change of conditions.

Award thirteen years later

Where there was no contention in original compensation proceeding that employee's injury resulted in permanent partial disability, and industrial commission had nothing before it on which to base a determination that employee was or was not to any extent permanently disabled, and employee was given an award only for permanent disfigurement, commission had jurisdiction, about thirteen years later, to make an award for permanent disability.

Purpose of provision

Provision of workmen's compensation act relating to authority of state compensation commissioner to increase an award on application of claimant was designed to limit the state compensation commissioner's jurisdiction with respect to time in which applications for reopening of case and granting of further compensation could be made.

W.Va.—Turner v. State Compensation Com'r, 17 S.E.2d 617, 123 W. Va. 673.

Applicable to employer and employee alike

W.Va.—Blosser v. State Compensation Com'r, 51 S.E.2d 71, 132 W. Va. 112.

Relationship between temporary and permanent disabilities

Statute respecting continuing jurisdiction of state compensation commissioner means that three-year period applies only to a temporary disability case which continues on that basis, and not to a case in which there is an award of permanent disability after temporary disability has been awarded and payments have ceased, and that one-year period applies only to a case in which permanent disability is awarded and paid, whether or not there has been prior award and payment for temporary disability.

W.Va.—Blosser v. State Compensation Com'r, supra.

Application to permanent disability cases

Fact that more than three years had elapsed since payments had been made by employer to injured employee for temporary disability, did not deprive state compensation commission of jurisdiction to consider employer's application to reopen case and modify award of permanent total disability to employee.

W.Va.—Blosser v. State Compensation Com'r, supra.

Limitation only on proceeding by employee. Under some statutes to that effect, the limitation prescribed by the statute applies to proceedings by the employee for modification of a formal award, on the ground of increased incapacity,⁹⁰ and does not apply to proceedings by an employer or insurer for the diminution of disability.⁹¹

What constitutes "last payment." What constitutes the "last payment" or "final payment," under provisions whereby the period of limitation is computed with relation to the date of the last or final payment, may vary with the circumstances of the particular case.⁹² The furnishing of medicines or equipment, or medical or hospital services, may con-

(2) An award of temporary compensation may be extended before expiration of the compensable period if kept within statutory limit of one hundred and fifty-six weeks, but after expiration of compensable period, temporary award could not be made for a later separate period.

What constitutes "formal award"

"Final judgment" awarding compensation to injured employee, where issue was litigated and determined on its merits without involving elements of agreement, was held "formal award" within statute, and hence reviewable within two years from date when employee last received payment of compensation on ground that his incapacity had subsequently increased.

N.J.—Tucker v. Frank J. Beltramo, Inc., 186 A. 821, 117 N.J.Law 72, affirmed 192 A. 62, 118 N.J.Law 301.

Extended reparative compensation not within limitation

The two-year limitation provision of the statute permitting review of a formal award in a workmen's compensation proceeding on ground that incapacity of injured employee has subsequently increased does not apply to applications for extended reparative compensation, but the statute providing for such compensation imposes a continuing obligation on the employer commensurate with continuing nature of employee's injury.

N.J.—Clark v. American Can Co., 73 A.2d 342, 4 N.J. 527.

91. Proceeding by employer at any time

Employer, who was required to pay employee compensation for total and permanent disability resulting from amputation of arm at shoulder, could, at any time, initiate proceedings to review award on ground that disability had diminished.

92. Fla.—Evans v. City of Miami, 60 So.2d 20.

71 C.J. p 1446 note 11 [d].

Payment in full of compensation award constituted the "final payment of the claim," within statute authorizing industrial board to review any award or settlement made between parties and filed with board within two years from date that board is notified of final payment of the claim. Ga.—Kirkland v. Employers Liability Assur. Corp., 25 S.E.2d 723, 69 Ga. App. 433.

Tender as constituting "payment"

Under statute which does not permit deputy commissioner to reopen a compensation case unless application is made within one year after date of last "payment" of compensation, the word "payment" must be construed as being met by a tender made of money which is legal tender; and where amount awarded injured employee was tendered in legal tender to employee, who refused the tender, the date of the last tender was a final "payment" so that deputy commissioner was without power to modify the order where application was not made until more than one year after the final tender.

U.S.—Imperato v. Lowe, D.C.N.Y., 32 F.Supp. 563, affirmed, C.C.A., 123 F. 2d 1001.

Payment by draft or check

(1) Under provision of longshoremen's compensation act authorizing deputy commissioner to review case on change in condition, deputy commissioner could not reopen and review case where no application therefor was made within one year after draft for last payment was received by claimant, though draft was not collected until over a month after it was received.

U.S.—Bajerczak v. B. H. Sobelman & Co., D.C.Pa., 89 F.Supp. 78.

(2) Where compensation check payable to order of claimant was received and deposited by him in his bank on or before a certain day and check on following day was presented and honored by drawee bank, which debited employer's account, check constituted "payment" on day of receipt within meaning of statute requiring claim for additional compensation to be filed within two years after last "payment" of compensation by an employer.

N.J.—Hayes v. Federal Shipbuilding & Dry Dock Co., 68 A.2d 766, 5 N.J. Super. 212.

(3) Where request for review of award on ground of change in claimant's condition was not received by industrial commission until more than twelve months after draft issued by insurance carrier payable to claimant in lump-sum payment of award had been delivered to and accepted by claimant, such request for review came too late and was barred, though it was received by commission within twelve months from date of payment of draft by bank on which it was drawn.

Wages while performing lighter work

Where employee, after receiving disability compensation to May, 1926, returned to lighter work at former wages and continued in such work until 1929, employee could not compel commission to grant rehearing of application filed 1937, for an adjustment of claim for compensation on theory that amounts received while performing lighter work should be treated as "disability compensation" and that hence his application for adjustment was filed within the statutory ten-year period.

Ohio.—State ex rel. Milton v. Industrial Commission of Ohio, 20 N.E. 2d 926, 135 Ohio St. 307.

Last payment by employer; change of employers

Where city furnished medical treatment and paid claimant, injured while employed at hospital owned and operated by city, her full salary, which included workmen's compensation for all periods of disability, while city owned hospital, claim against city for further compensa-

stitute a payment of compensation or a waiver which suspends the running of the time;⁹³ but the payment of a physician for services rendered to the injured employee is not the payment of compensation within the statute;⁹⁴ nor is the reimbursement of traveling expenses of claimant, in taking a physical examination to determine whether there was any compensable condition, such payment.⁹⁵

In the case of the payment by the employer of a lump sum in lieu of the payments to be made weekly, while some authorities compute the time of last payment from the date of the payment of the lump sum,⁹⁶ others hold that the advance payment of a lump sum does not constitute such final payment,⁹⁷ and that the statutory period does not begin to run until the time when the last payment would have been made if paid weekly.⁹⁸

Statutes barring ancient claims arising before specific date. Statutes designed to terminate ancient claims, such as a provision prohibiting any further award in cases arising from injuries occurring prior to a stated date, unless application therefor is filed before another specific date, are favored by the courts,⁹⁹ and create an absolute bar against applications not made before the stated date.¹

(3) Tolling of Statute

Provisions of general statutes of limitation relating to the tolling of such statutes ordinarily are inapplicable to proceedings to modify an award. The making of an application to modify generally tolls the statute; and subsequent steps, by the applicant or by the board or commission, may be taken even after the expiration of the statutory period of limitation.

Provisions of general statutes of limitation relating to the tolling of such statutes ordinarily are inapplicable to proceedings to modify an award.² Thus the running of the statutory period is not tolled by the insanity of the employee;³ nor does the refusal to permit claimant's attorney to examine hospital records and X-rays before an application to reopen was made extend the time within which the application to reopen can be made.⁴ Where a statute of limitations begins to run from the date of injury, the fact that the injured person is incompetent and that a guardian was appointed for him will not suspend the running or change the date of the starting of the period;⁵ and the time is not to be computed from the date that the guardian qualified.⁶

Pendency of appeal or other proceeding. In general, the running of the statute of limitations is not tolled by the pendency of an appeal from the order

tion filed more than two years after last compensation payment by city was barred by limitations, since sale of hospital to county before expiration of limitation period resulted in a change of employer, even though claimant continued to work at hospital and under workmen's compensation act the term "employment" includes employment by state and all political subdivisions.

15. Right not lost by commissioner's failure to act in time

Where the compensation commissioner failed to finally pass on and determine the merits of a claim for additional compensation within ninety days from the filing of an application in writing for a readjustment of the claim, the commissioner could not thereafter assert that his failure to act as required by statute destroyed his jurisdiction, especially in view of the fact that he permitted the filing of additional evidence and delayed a decision on the case, as finally submitted, for almost six months.

16. Ohio.—Nichols v. Ohio Collieries Co., 62 N.E.2d 636, 75 Ohio App. 474.

Effect of stipulation as to application

Since the requirement is jurisdictional, while the parties could not by stipulation provide a substitute for the necessity for filing the application, a stipulation to the effect that such application had been filed might be sufficient proof of the filing thereof; but where original application to extend the jurisdiction of the industrial commission to modify a compensation award beyond the ten-year period contradicted the admission in parties' stipulation that an application had been filed within the ten-year period, trial court had right to consider all evidence in order to ascertain the truth and was not bound by the stipulation.

Ohio.—Nichols v. Ohio Collieries Co., supra.

Commissioner not estopped to assert failure to file claim

Under statute providing for readjustment of compensation claim, claimant seeking readjustment must file application in writing during the statutory period or make an affirmative showing that following the oral request and within the period the commissioner pursued such a course of conduct that he is estopped to deny that a proper application had in fact been filed; and, where claimant failed to file application for readjustment of compensation claim within one year period prescribed by statute, compensation commissioner's letter to the effect that claimant had been amply compensated for loss of eye and that defect of vision of other eye was in no way connected with the injury did not indicate such a course of conduct as to "estop" the commissioner from denying that a proper claim had in fact been filed.

sufficient to toll the statute and keep the claim open,¹⁷ even though the formal application is not filed until after the expiration of the period.¹⁸

Under the provisions of some statutes there is a distinction between the time limitation on the power of the commission to rescind, alter, or amend an award generally and the limitation of the right of an injured employee to institute proceedings for compensation for new and further disability,¹⁹ in that under the latter limitation a proceeding is timely if it is instituted in time, that is, if the application for compensation for new and further disability is filed in time, even though the commission takes no action on it until after the period of limitation,²⁰ while in other proceedings, under the general limitation, the commission is without jurisdiction to act on a petition after the expiration of the limitation period, even though it was filed within the period.²¹ Thus, there is a distinction between an employee's proceeding for new and further disability and any proceeding by the employer or insurer, since the employer's or insurer's proceeding is governed by the limitation on the powers of the commission gen-

Letter held sufficient

A letter written by compensation claimant's counsel to state compensation commissioner, asking that letter be treated as formal petition of claimant for an increased award on his claim, in order to keep the claim open, and stating that counsel expected to be out of his office and on his return would file additional medical evidence, was sufficient to toll limitations.

Failure of commission to decide particular issue

Where award of compensation for total temporary disability left injured employee without any decision upon issue of permanent disability presented by employee's petition filed within the statutory period after which an award cannot be altered, amended, or rescinded, industrial commission on request for further hearing could award permanent disability more than the prescribed period following the injury.

Extension not effected by timely independent petition

Where workmen's compensation claimant filed petition for further medical treatment, and counsel stipulated that only issue was need for Reservation of jurisdiction held proper

Industrial accident commission's order in workmen's compensation case, finding that workman's condition was not stationary and stating that jurisdiction to make findings as to nature and extent of disability was being reserved, was to be construed in connection with petition which claimed new and further disability and on which the order was based, and since order also had effect of taking from prior award the final character of such award, order was reservation of jurisdiction to act on the petition and was not ineffective attempt to extend time within which commission could alter or amend the prior award.

erally.²² In any event, there can be no change made where the application is made after the expiration of the statutory period.²³

§ 857. Conditions Precedent; Notice

The party seeking modification of an award must perform all conditions precedent, which may include payment of compensation due at the time of the proceeding and notice of the application and opportunity to be heard.

The party seeking the modification of an award must perform all conditions precedent to such a proceeding.²⁴ While it is a condition precedent to the right to make an application for new and further disability that there must have been earlier proceedings, commenced with the proper filing of claimant's original claim,²⁵ it is not necessary, in order that a proceeding may be instituted for an increase in compensation by reason of an increase in disability, that there first be a review of the original award and due approval by the courts.²⁶

Payment of compensation. In the absence of a provision to that effect in the act, the employer is not required to pay compensation in accordance with the original award up until the time of his filing an application for a modification of such award as a condition precedent to the maintenance of the proceeding.²⁷ Certainly the employer's failure to pay compensation awarded for a temporary total disability during such time as the employee is gainfully employed for a wage in excess of the compensation awarded is no justification for a dismissal of the application for a modification of the award on the ground of default in payment of compensation under the original award.²⁸

On the other hand, in some jurisdictions, the employer and the insurer are not entitled to a change in a compensation award on the ground of the changed condition of the employee, where at the time of the application the compensation then due under the original award was not fully paid;²⁹ and, under a statute expressly so providing, no proceedings may be commenced to stop or reduce compensation unless the compensation provided in the award is paid or tendered to within a specified time before the proceeding is commenced,³⁰ although the requirement has been held not to be jurisdictional.³¹ In any event, it has been held that the commission cannot, as a condition precedent to the hearing of the application to end the compensation award, require the payment of compensation for the period between the time of the filing of the application and the hearing thereon.³²

Notice; opportunity to be heard. It is usually held that the provision of the act requiring a notice of the accident or injury to be given to the employer before an original proceeding for compensation may be instituted, discussed supra §§ 445-457, has no application in the case of a subsequent proceeding to increase the compensation allowed under the original award,³³ the notice given in the original instance being sufficient.³⁴

22. Petition filed on last day of period

Industrial accident commission could not, after expiration of the limitation period on filing petition to rescind and amend compensation awards, act on the petition of the insurance carrier which was filed on the last day of the limitation period. Failure to petition board to order medical examination

Where employer, on refusal of employee, who was receiving compensation, to submit to medical examination, failed to petition the workmen's compensation board to make an order directing employee to submit to medical examination, referee did not abuse his discretion in refusing motion to suspend compensation payments for the reason that employee refused to submit to examination requested by employer.

On the other hand, statutory requirements as to notice to an employer of an application for an additional award of compensation have been held to be jurisdictional.³⁵ Moreover, an opportunity to be heard must be given to the parties interested before an award may be modified;³⁶ and a modification of an award without such opportunity being given is void.³⁷ Notice that an award would be amended unless good cause to the contrary was shown within a specified time affords such opportunity,³⁸ such notice not being required to state a definite time for a hearing on such matter.³⁹

Whether an injured employee must give his employer notice of his intention to seek treatment of his injuries may depend on the circumstances of the particular case.⁴⁰

Waiver of notice. Where notice to the employer of the recurrence of the disability is necessary before a proceeding therein may be brought, a failure of the employer to raise such question and a submission to the jurisdiction of the board is a waiver of such requirement.⁴¹

Notice of reclassification. Where so required by the act, notice of a change in the classification of the disability must be given to the employee.⁴²

§ 858. Persons Entitled to Apply and Parties to Application

An application for an increase, decrease, or termination of an award of compensation must be made by a party to it or someone in privity with a party; and all interested parties may properly be made parties to the proceeding, and may have the right to be made parties.

An application for an increase, decrease, or termination of an award of compensation must be made by a party to it,⁴³ or someone in privity with such party,⁴⁴ or by some beneficiary entitled to benefits under the particular character of the award.⁴⁵ Ordinarily it may be made by either the employer or the employee.⁴⁶ A mother, whose compensation has been terminated on remarriage, as discussed supra § 147, has a right, as trustee for her minor children, to have the award completed by an award to the children of the unawarded balance.⁴⁷

Mental incompetency. In the case of an injured employee who is mentally incompetent, the application on his behalf may be made by a guardian ad and entered its appearance in district court when appeal was taken from award of compensation court in original compensation proceedings, and members of partnership filed answer in proceedings in district court, district court acquired jurisdiction over partnership and its members, and such jurisdiction continued so that partnership and its members were parties defendant in proceedings for modification of award to provide for additional benefits because of increased incapacity, even if such defendants were not properly served with process in modification proceedings.

An injured workman was not required by workmen's compensation act to give his employer notice of his intent to seek surgical treatment for back injury, which became worse after workmen's compensation division awarded him temporary and partial permanent disability compensation, though deputy director found at original hearing that operative surgery was not indicated at that time, where employer's plant manager refused operation requested by workman when he quit work after such award and he did not claim expenses of operation and medical or hospital bills.

litem or a conservator;⁴⁸ and the wife of an injured employee may make the application on behalf of her husband who by reason of his injury is mentally incapable of doing so on his own account.⁴⁹ However, where an injured employee who was mentally incompetent is shown to have been cured he can proceed in his own name.⁵⁰

Death of employee. The personal representative of a deceased claimant cannot petition for compensation based on the increased disability of the claimant during his lifetime;⁵¹ and a dependent, after the death of the employee, is not entitled to make such an application as regards an award made to the employee while living.⁵² However, where an employee died after instituting the proceeding for a review of the claim because of a changed condition, it may be proper to permit his widow and sole dependent to be substituted as the real party in interest for the prosecution of the claim;⁵³ and the widow has been held to be entitled to collect the compensation for loss of time because of the aggravation of the disability which had not been collected by the injured employee prior to his death.⁵⁴

Prior acceptance or acquiescence. The fact that an injured employee accepted a weekly award, or a total of weekly awards, for a certain kind of disability does not bar him from applying for additional compensation based on a somewhat different disability;⁵⁵ nor does the fact that the employer voluntarily paid compensation for a period of time preclude him from contesting a claim for additional compensation.⁵⁶ permanent partial disability, could not bar his application for additional compensation based on continuing disability.

Mont.—Paulich v. Republic Coal Co., 102 P.2d 4, 110 Mont. 174.

56. Applicability of statutes

An employer which voluntarily paid compensation for eight months was not precluded from contesting claim to total and permanent disability under section of statute requiring employer controverting right to compensation to file notice with deputy commissioner within fourteen days, in view of section providing for hearing when payments have been stopped, since that section applies where employer originally pays benefits without contest and later discovers that information upon which payments were made was erroneous.

60. Parties interested in issue of causation

Where, on application by workman to reopen compensation claim on ground of aggravation, record or evidence before board of industrial insurance appeals demonstrated that workman's right to benefits under the workmen's compensation act did not depend on which of two or more employments was the cause of the workman's condition, the board should have taken action on its own motion to bring in all parties interested in the issue of causation.

Wash.—Georgia-Pacific Plywood Co. v. Department of Labor and Indus-

§ 859. Pleading

Except where the board has the power to take such action on its own motion, a petition or application is essential to the modification of an award, but the application need not be in any special form, provided it gives the necessary information. General rules apply as to other pleadings and issues, proof, and variance.

Except in so far as the doctrine of estoppel or waiver may apply, as discussed below, under some statutes a formal petition or application is an essential prerequisite to the modification of an award for an increase, decrease, or termination of incapacity, or a change in the measure of dependence,⁶² the statutory requirements being, under some acts, jurisdictional,⁶³ and the modified award can only be from the date of the application.⁶⁴ Under other statutes, the board has the power to take such action on its own motion, as well as on the application of an interested party,⁶⁵ and the jurisdiction of the board does not depend upon an application or petition,⁶⁶ no pleading whatever being necessary to invoke the jurisdiction of the board.⁶⁷

Under a statute providing that, on its own motion or on the application of any party in interest, the board may, subject to specified limitations, review any award, decision, or order, any instrument which puts the board on notice that there has been a change in claimant's condition may be a sufficient basis for it to review an award,⁶⁸ as, for example, an attending physician's report that there was a change in claimant's condition.⁶⁹ Under statutes providing for an application or petition, it is generally held that it need not be in any special form or contain any special language,⁷⁰ as long as it rules of common-law pleading,⁷³ but rather should be liberally construed.⁷⁴

In general, an application or petition should state or give necessary information,⁷⁵ as, for example, the nature of the claim being made⁷⁶ and the grounds therefor,⁷⁷ although, where pleadings are pensation instead of an application for review, was immaterial.

(3) Employer's letter addressed to secretary of workmen's compensation commission advising commissioner that claimant had died prior to commissioner's award to claimant for silicosis in second stage, and that employer had a check for one thousand six hundred dollars and desired to return it and appeal from commissioner's order making the award, if necessary, could have been treated as a suggestion to commissioner of claimant's death, on which a proper application for modification of award could have been based.

W.Va.—Whited v. State Compensation Com'r, 49 S.E.2d 838, 131 W. Va. 646.

(4) Where workman's application was headed by the phrase "to reopen case, claim No. 574182" and fixed time when and described manner in which workman was injured and physician's letter accompanying application stated that, as the result of the injury which occurred on date fixed by application, the workman's condition had gradually become more aggravated and at present workman was unable to continue with his occupation, the application and the letter constituted an "application for additional compensation by reason of aggravation" so that order of commission granting additional compensation was made pursuant to the application rather than on commission's own motion.

Or.—Hinkle v. State Industrial Acc. Commission, 97 P.2d 725, 163 Or. 395.

Second petition to stop compensation

Award stopping compensation because claimant's disability had ceased was held proper as against contention that since petition which was filed more than ten months after former petition to stop compensation contained same allegations, it was in fact a petition for a rehearing, which department of labor and industry was unauthorized to grant.

Mich.—Adams v. C. O. Barton Co., 264 N.W. 333, 274 Mich. 175.

Application held insufficient

Claimant, petitioning for increased compensation, is not entitled to have commissioner set time and place for hearing of evidence, in absence of reasonable showing of condition not considered when former award was made.

W.Va.—Phillips v. State Compensation Com'r, 174 S.E. 561, 114 W.Va. 648.

Correspondence held insufficient

Or.—Grunnett v. State Industrial Accident Commission, 215 P. 831, 108 Or. 178.

71 C.J. p 1452 note 76 [b].

(2) Correspondence between a claimant and industrial commission, relative to claim for additional award, which did not set forth facts predicated claim of violation of specific safety requirement, was insufficient to constitute an application for an additional award.

Ohio.—State ex rel. Fruehauf Trailer Co. v. Coffinberry, 95 N.E.2d 331, 154 Ohio St. 241.

(3) A letter from compensation claimant's attorney to industrial accident commission, inquiring whether claim had been filed, and requesting commission to send proper form in case claim had not been filed, so that attorney could file claim immediately, did not constitute an "application" for additional compensation on account of aggravation of disability, especially in view of statutory requirement that such an application set forth facts to show an aggravation of disability and degree thereof, and hence the commission in denying additional compensation acted on its own motion, and the commission's order was not appealable.

Employers' allegation held sufficient

In suit by employer and insurer for permission to discontinue compensation payments to claimant under a judgment awarding weekly compensation, on ground that disability had ceased, allegation that disability had totally "ceased" was equivalent to an allegation that claimant's incapacity had "diminished" within meaning of the compen-

not essential, an application need not be considered insufficient for failure to allege sufficient facts.⁷⁸ A belated demand by an employee for compensation for a sympathetic affliction not otherwise related to the original injury does not constitute an application to modify or increase the compensation being paid for the original injury.⁷⁹

Being in the nature of a pleading,⁸⁰ the petition should be consistent with the findings of the board in making the award.⁸¹ If it appears at the hearing that the petition does not conform to the evidence,⁸² the petition should be amended before the award is entered.⁸³ Amendments to the application or petition may be made in a proper case,⁸⁴ and the amended petition relates back to the time of filing of the prior petition and supersedes it.⁸⁵

A defect in a petition will not justify the reversal of an award where the employer was not prejudiced or misled by the defect.⁸⁶ Objections to application should be considered by the board before proceeding with the case on the merits.⁸⁷

Estoppel or waiver as to insufficiency of application. Where the commission has treated an informal complaint as an application for readjustment of compensation and has made the additional award on that basis, the commission may be estopped to question the sufficiency of such application;⁸⁸ and the failure of a party to object timely to a petition which is too general may operate as a waiver or sation act, and stated a cause of action.

La.—Avoyelles Wholesale Grocery Co. v. Elmore, App., 81 So.2d 434.

Petition held insufficient

Where it was not apparent on the face of the petition that employee had suffered any increase of incapacity since determination of original proceeding in which he had been awarded a judgment for permanent partial disability of a leg, employee was not entitled to an increase in compensation under statute.

Tenn.—Hay v. Woosley, 135 S.W.2d 933, 175 Tenn. 475.

New and additional disability; change of condition

(1) Where employee did not allege in application for readjustment and reopening of workmen's compensation claim that his disability claimed was new, additional, and previously undiscovered, but alleged that it had existed from date of his release, employee could not have his case reopened, and commission had no authority to grant relief upon it.

Ariz.—London v. Industrial Commission, 223 P.2d 929, 71 Ariz. 111—Graves v. Industrial Commission, 223 P.2d 817, 71 Ariz. 74.

(2) Affidavit in support of motion to reopen compensation award which contained no statement that there had been change in claimant's condition ascribable to the injury received was insufficient to warrant reopening of award.

Ky.—Jude v. Cabbage, 251 S.W.2d 584.

Petition stating wrong ground for modification

Petition for modification of workmen's compensation award for death of claimant's husband on the ground that decedent's average weekly wage was erroneously computed could not be treated as a petition under section providing for modification of agreement or award on change in disability of injured person.

Pa.—Busch v. Jones & Laughlin Steel Corp., 27 A.2d 656, 150 Pa.Super. 48.

Change of condition as to noncompensable injury

Where compensation claimant, applying to industrial commission for reopening of case on ground of change of condition after commission denied claim for compensation for back injury, attached to application a physician's report referring only to back injury as causing such change and offered depositions of two other physicians referring only to such injury as cause of further disability, and trial commissioner stated that hearing was to determine change of condition due to back injury, which he found was not result of original accident, application was properly denied, although it did not specifically mention back injury.

Failure to allege change in condition

In proceeding before state industrial commission to recover additional compensation for temporary total disability, evidence adduced without objection showing a change in condition will sustain award, although change in condition is not alleged in petition.

Amendments held proper

Where award of workmen's compensation for a "sprained" back was allowed and discontinued, and application for modification, stating that injury was the tearing apart of vertebrae of back, was denied, and petition alleging that claimant sustained a sacroiliac sprain, contusions of back, and arthritis of the spine, permitting amendment of petition to state that injuries superimposed on previous condition of arthritis aggravated and accelerated condition of arthritis was not an abuse of discretion, since the several descriptions of the effect of the injury did not change the time and place of injury or part of body injured, and were not inconsistent with each other.

88. Letter accepted as application

Where industrial commission, after award for hernia injury, treated claimant's letter as application for readjustment of compensation and made additional award on that basis, commission was estopped to question sufficiency of letter as such application or its jurisdiction to make award.

estoppel,⁸⁹ provided the essential elements for the application of the doctrine of estoppel are present.⁹⁰

Special forms in special circumstances. A special form of application for reopening of a compensation claim may be required, under statutes expressly so providing, in special circumstances, as where specified times have elapsed since the date of the injury or death or since the date of the last payment of compensation.⁹¹

Medical reports. Where the statute so requires, the claimant must include with his application a certificate of the physician who attended him;⁹² but in the absence of such a provision a medical report is not required to be attached to the application.⁹³ Under a rule to that effect, a petition to stop compensation to an employee, and its accompanying affidavit, should contain facts as to the employee's physical condition;⁹⁴ but such requirement has been held not to be jurisdictional.⁹⁵

Second petition to reopen award. Where a second petition for the reopening of a claim was filed after an order denying a prior petition therefor, and without an appeal having been taken from such order, the second petition presents only a claim for compensation based on the aggravation of claimant's condition subsequent to the date of the order denying the first petition.⁹⁶

Demurrers. Rules concerning demurrers as to pleadings generally have been applied to demurrers to petitions to increase, decrease, or terminate a compensation award.⁹⁷

No prior award. Where there has been no award, an employee's petition for additional compensation may, in some circumstances, be viewed as an original petition.⁹⁸

Answer. In general, matters going to the defense of an application must be pleaded to be available.⁹⁹

89. Failure to object or ask continuance

Petition for review of compensation award filed in general terms, but on printed form furnished by department of labor, signed by the petitioner and asking for a review of his incapacity was not subject to dismissal as improperly drawn, where employer went to trial without asking for a continuance on grounds of surprise or that petitioner make a fuller statement of the dispute between the parties. R.I.—Mondille v. Ward Baking Co., 57 A.2d 447, 73 R.I. 473.

90. No ground for invocation of estoppel

That employer treated a second petition as for compensation for increased disability did not preclude employer from questioning its sufficiency where there was no ground upon which doctrine of estoppel in pais could be invoked against the employer. N.J.—Toohey v. Gorman, 12 A.2d 873, 125 N.J.Law 41.

91. Statutory times held not to have elapsed

Where statute required that application for reopening of compensation claim of injured employee must be made on special form after lapse of seven years from date of injury or death and lapse of three years from date of last payment and that if award was made it should be granted from special fund, compensation board was entitled to treat physician's report made within three years of last payment which set forth all pertinent facts necessary to application to reopen claim as such application.

N.Y.—Finkle v. Cushing Stone Co., 104 N.Y.S.2d 692, 278 App.Div. 250, appeal denied 105 N.Y.S.2d 1006, 278 App.Div. 985.

92. Late filing of certificate held sufficient

Failure of workman's compensation claimant, after award, to submit physician's certificate with application for readjustment of compensation, as required by statute, did not deprive claimant of right to have application heard, where, after the award and shortly before the filing of the application, claimant's physician filed two reports of claimant's condition. Rule held reasonable

Rule of department of labor and industry requiring petition to stop compensation to set forth facts as to employee's physical condition and extent of disability, if any, is a reasonable requirement. Mich.—Paselli v. Utley, supra.

95. Mich.—Seppi v. Ford Motor Co., 279 N.W. 881, 284 Mich. 410.

Pa.—Brink v. Consolidation Coal Co., 35 Pa. Dist. & Co. 551, 9 Som. Leg. J. 269.

Petition and affidavit held sufficient

(1) Where employer's petition urged stoppage of compensation not only because of asserted recovery of employee but because of employee's rehabilitation through resumption of employment, affidavit accompanying petition, even though it lacked a statement setting forth in detail employee's physical condition as required by the rule of the commission, was sufficient to confer jurisdiction upon the department to stop compensation.

Mich.—Seppi v. Ford Motor Co., 279 N.W. 881, 284 Mich. 410.

(2) However, it was also held that a petition by attorney for insurance carrier that he had been advised by employer that employee resumed his former duties as of certain date at wage equal to or greater than that received at time of accident was insufficient, and should not have been entertained by department. Mich.—Paselli v. Utley, 276 N.W. 444, 282 Mich. 287.

96. Wash.—Stevich v. Department of Labor and Industries, 47 P.2d 32, 132 Wash. 401.

Neb.—Peek v. Ayres Auto Supply, 59 N.W.2d 564, 157 Neb. 363.

98. Previous petition dismissed on merits

Employee's petition for additional compensation under compensation act was viewed as original petition, notwithstanding previous petition was dismissed after hearing on merits.

Answer and notice of defense to

Hence, a party desiring to avail himself of the defense of limitations must plead such defense.¹ Where the accident commission gave notice that an award would be amended in the absence of good cause shown, and insurer appeared and objected on a particular ground, its failure to object on other grounds waived them.² That a statute interposes a general denial to the application where no answer is filed does not operate to prevent a waiver from arising as to matters not raised.³ However, an employer is not estopped to claim the benefit of the final order of the commission, denying additional compensation for an increased disability, by failure to plead it in bar to a subsequent petition complaining of the same disability, the entire record of the case, including all former orders or awards, being necessarily before the commission.⁴ Amendments to an answer may be made in a proper case.⁵

Issues, proof, and variance. In accordance with general rules, the issues on the proceeding to increase, decrease, or terminate a compensation award depend on the pleadings.⁶ Such matters as are necessary to entitle applicant to the relief sought must be shown or proved;⁷ but matters not in issue need not be proved.⁸ The evidence should conform to the pleadings;⁹ and evidence which is not excluded by any rule or principle of law may be introduced if it tends to support an issue made by the pleadings.¹⁰ Thus, in a proceeding for further compensation, the employer or insurer may prove that the employee's condition was not related to the original injury.¹¹

Change in condition as main issue

On application to review award because of change in physical condition, main fact in issue is whether physical condition, as established by evidence at previous hearing, has changed since that time.

- Ind.—Morgan v. Wooley, 6 N.E.2d 717, 103 Ind.App. 242.

Issues as to both sides

- Pa.—Foster v. Mellon Stuart Co., 173 A. 773, 114 Pa.Super. 311.

(2) Where employer's petition to review prior award alleging a change in condition in that employee had completely recovered was considered at same time as employee's petition for review alleging that temporary total disability has ceased, leaving employee with a permanent partial impairment, industrial board had jurisdiction to award compensation for temporary total disability based upon a recurrence of hernia from which employee originally suffered.

- Ind.—Wolfcale v. Grush, 57 N.E.2d 438, 115 Ind.App. 155.

Matter determined on prior application

Leg amputation was before industrial commission when it dismissed application for modification of compensation award, with respect to question whether right to compensation for amputation was finally determined on failure to file application for rehearing, where commission's record disclosed that before such time claimant filed affidavit that he had leg amputated and presented claim that his right foot had been amputated, and attending physician prepared supplemental report in which amputation was mentioned five times.

- Ohio.—State ex rel. Szalay v. Industrial Commission of Ohio, 199 N.E. 76, 130 Ohio St. 269.

Matters held not in issue

Where claimant's application for rehearing made no mention of any claimed aggravation to claimant's right hip or leg and there had never been a prior determination by department of any disability to right hip or leg resulting from original injury and hearing before joint board was limited strictly to matter of aggravation, regardless of fact that evidence took a wide range, joint board properly refused to consider any claimed aggravation to right hip and leg, notwithstanding there was testimony relevant thereto.

a. Burden of Proof

In general, the burden of proof, or of proving a change in the conditions on which an award of compensation rests, is on the party seeking to change an existing compensation order or award.

Except in so far as the rule may be affected by evidence introduced or by the admission of a party,¹² the burden of proof, or of proving a change in the conditions on which an award of compensation rests, is on the party seeking to change an existing compensation order or award.¹³

Burden on employee. An injured employee seeking increased or continued compensation has the burden of proving his case and the necessary elements thereof,¹⁴ as by showing that his condition has changed since the last award,¹⁵ which has

No prior adjudication as to disability

Where no adjudication had been made in original workmen's compensation award as to extent of injured employee's disability, proof of change or deterioration in employee's condition since original award was not essential to subsequent award granting employee additional compensation.

Ga.—General Motors Corp. v. Craig, 85 S.E.2d 441, 91 Ga.App. 239.

Separate and distinct disability

Where it was determined by two referees and affirmed by compensation board that claimant's injury had resolved itself into permanent loss of use of foot, claimant would be required, in order to obtain additional compensation, to show that by reason of an injury to some organ or portion of his body, other than his foot, he was suffering a disability separate from disability normally flowing from loss of use of his foot.

Pa.—Porto v. Philadelphia & Reading Coal & Iron Co., 10 A.2d 29, 137 Pa.Super. 590.

Extent of impairment from subsequent injury

Rule not affected by statutory provision

Under provision of compensation act basing payments for partial disability on difference between former wages and subsequent earning power, and providing that "earning power" should not be less than subsequent earnings, receipt thereafter of equivalent wages does not affect burden of proof.

Pa.—Holtz v. McGraw & Bindley, 54 A.2d 905, 161 Pa.Super. 371.

Agreement for resumption of payments

To entitle injured employee to resumption of compensation payments, stopped by agreement providing for resumption thereof if future disability from injuries developed or he became unable to continue work because of disability due to accident, burden was on him to prove disability lessening his earning capacity because of accident, and proof of physical condition not impairing such capacity was insufficient.

In the event of the death of an employee who had been receiving compensation for a compensable injury, the burden on dependent claimant is only to prove a causal relation between the adjudicated compensable injury and the death.²¹

Burden on employer. On the other hand, an employer or insurer seeking to reopen an award or otherwise to secure a diminution or discontinuance of compensation has the burden of proving his case,²² as by showing a change or improvement in the employee's condition,²³ as that the incapacity of the employee has diminished²⁴ or ceased,²⁵ or that, if his disability continues, such continuance is due to disconnected causes and not to the original injury,²⁶ although it has been held that if the employer establishes that disability was not caused by the original injury he need not go further and affirmatively show that it was due to some other cause.²⁷ Before an employer can avail himself of the plea of the statute of limitations providing that the board shall not modify an award after the expiration of one year from termination of the compensation period fixed in the original award, he is burdened with showing when the disability ended.²⁸

The employer or insurer also has the burden of showing that the employee is now able to resume work of the same kind or of the same general character as the work in which he was engaged at the time he received the injuries for which he was awarded compensation in the first instance;²⁹ or is able to perform such work as is ordinarily available in the community in which he resides, and can thereby earn sufficient wages to justify a finding of partial incapacity;³⁰ or that employment tendered by the employer, which claimant refused to accept, was such as claimant could perform.³¹ reducing compensation accordingly, assumed a heavy burden of proof.

Availability of "light work." Where an employer or insurer seeks reduction of compensation and it appears that the employee has so far recovered as to be able to perform light work, it has been held that the employer or insurer is not under the burden of showing that light work is available to the employee,³² but that the burden rests on the employee to show that such work is unavailable.³³ However, it has also been held that the burden is on the employer to prove that light work, such as would have therapeutic value in enabling the injured employee to rehabilitate himself, was available to him.³⁴

b. Presumptions

Various presumptions and inferences of fact obtain in proceedings to increase, decrease, or terminate a compensation award, such as a presumption that the physical condition of the employee at a former time continues.

Various presumptions and inferences of fact have been held to obtain in a proceeding to increase, decrease, or terminate a compensation award.³⁵ Thus, the physical condition of an employee shown to have existed in a former workmen's compensation proceeding or at a former time, is presumed to continue so until rebutted,³⁶ although it is also presumed not to continue beyond the period for which compensation was paid him by the employer;³⁷ and where the original disability was found to be compensable, the subsequent partial disability is entitled to a presumption of continuing causally related disability in a subsequent proceeding.³⁸ Where an employer or insurance carrier seeks to discontinue compensation on the ground that continued disability is due merely to a preëxisting disease, there is a presumption that continued disability is due to the accidental injury.³⁹

Under a statute providing that any disability beginning more than a stated period from the date of the accident shall be conclusively presumed not to be due to such accident, the presumption is so far conclusive as to deprive the commission of the power to infer a causal connection no matter what evidence may be adduced to show it,⁴⁰ although the statutory presumption is inapplicable to a disability beginning before expiration of the specified period and recurring thereafter.⁴¹ In the absence of a showing to the contrary, it is presumed that the injured employee would have taken advantage of selective work which he could have performed in his injured condition, if such work had been available.⁴² In an employee's proceeding to secure additional compensation, it will be presumed from the original adjudication that there was a compliance with the jurisdictional requirements of timely giving of notice of injury⁴³ and due filing of claim for compensation.⁴⁴

c. Admissibility

In general, evidence which is relevant and material to prove or disprove an issue, and competent under general rules, is admissible in proceedings to increase, decrease, or terminate a compensation award.

Restoration of compensation at loss of employment

Under statute providing that compensation payable to workman, when added to his earning capacity after injury, should not exceed average weekly earnings at time of injury, when employee seeks to have compensation restored because he has lost employment he should not be required to make showing of actual change of physical condition which would discourage attempts at rehabilitation by imposing an unfair hazard thereon.

While, where express statutory provisions to that effect exist, the administrative compensation agency is not bound by common-law or statutory rules of evidence,⁴⁵ and may receive such evidence as in its judgment would best ascertain the rights of the parties,⁴⁶ it is generally held, in accordance with rules governing the admissibility of evidence in civil actions generally, that in a proceeding to increase, decrease, or terminate a compensation award, any evidence which is relevant and material to prove or disprove a particular issue, and competent under the general rules of evidence, is admissible;⁴⁷ and, conversely, that evidence which is irrelevant or immaterial,⁴⁸ or which from its nature is incompetent

(2) In workmen's compensation proceedings, a written statement which was made by claimant's doctor as part of original claim for aggravation but which was inconsistent with doctor's testimony was not evidence on which claimant could rely to establish his case and was at most a prior unsworn statement which could serve no purpose except that of impeachment.

Particular evidence held admissible

Where compensation award based on receipt and report or stipulation is made by industrial commission, and it is impossible to determine what character of disability was included in award, commission, on subsequent hearing, may consider competent evidence to determine character or extent of disability determined by prior award.

51. Ariz.—Nevitt v. Industrial Commission, 217 P.2d 1039, 70 Ariz. 172.

Particular evidence held inadmissible

(1) On review of compensation award based on alleged change in employee's condition, evidence that condition causing disability was not caused by accident is incompetent and inadmissible.

Ga.—Hartford Accident & Indemnity Co. v. Camp, 26 S.E.2d 679, 69 Ga. App. 753.

(2) Compensation claimant's disability due to heart disease having been found by industrial accident board not to have a causal connection with injury to claimant's hand could not be considered in determining whether condition of his hand rendered claimant totally and permanently disabled for purpose of awarding further compensation on that ground.

Record in proceeding to perpetuate testimony

Where deceased employee in addition to widow to whom compensation was awarded was survived by partially dependent minor children who might at some future time become entitled to an award, compensation commissioner would have jurisdiction, on proper notice, to hold a hearing in nature of a proceeding to perpetuate testimony, and a transcript of such testimony, made a part of the file of case, may be properly considered in proceedings for a supplemental award.

Conn.—Morrill v. Hartford Painting & Decorating Co., 43 A.2d 74, 132 Conn. 163.

Evidence held inadmissible

Proof that employee, seeking modification of compensation award, so as to be allowed compensation for permanent total disability, engaged, with some associates in some oil exploration, which did not require any physical work on part of employee, could not be taken into consideration in determining employee's incapacity.

Wash.—Anderson v. Department of Labor and Industries, 159 P.2d 397, 23 Wash.2d 76.

(2) On employer's application to stop payment of compensation because of change in employee's condition industrial board's refusal to admit testimony of physicians to show that employee's alleged incapacity was not due to his employment and that employee was not totally incapacitated, on ground that physicians had not seen employee at time of first hearing or before time of examination, was error, since employee's condition at hearing on "change in condition" is a "question of fact" to be determined not by what his condition might have been at or prior to original award, but by what it was after application for hearing on change in condition.

Ga.—Wilson v. Swift & Co., 23 S.E. 2d 261, 68 Ga.App. 701.

(3) A physician, who had examined and treated an injured employee prior and subsequent to last previous order of award made by state industrial commission in compensation proceeding, was a competent witness at a hearing held to determine whether there had been a change in condition of such employee.

Okl.—J. E. Smith & Sons v. Bay, 99 P.2d 152, 186 Okl. 544.

(4) Testimony as to extent of permanent partial disability of compensation claimant's hand by two physicians, of whom only one examined claimant before as well as after industrial commission's first award of compensation for lesser extent of such disability, was admissible in corroboration of such physician's testimony as to progressive nature of injury and extent of disability in proceeding for award of additional compensation on ground of change of condition.

Okl.—Lumbermen's Supply Co. v. Mackey, 205 P.2d 870, 201 Okl. 296.

(5) In proceeding for increase in compensation award on ground of increased disability where examining physicians who testified on original hearing were deceased and medical experts had no personal knowledge of claimant's condition at prior hearing, medical experts were permitted to use findings of deceased medical witnesses at prior hearing as a basis for comparison and formulating opinion as to character and extent of change in disability of claimant.

N.J.—Licker v. J. G. Martin Box Co., 21 A.2d 595, 127 N.J.Law 136.

(2) Fact that workman annually represented in applications for motor vehicle driver's license that he was free from physical and mental disability was not material to his claim for additional workmen's compensation for total psycho-neurotic disability, nor did representation made on application for unemployment compensation in year following alleged accident, that he was able to work, impair his proof of illness and disability.

N.J.—Simon v. R. H. H. Steel Laundry, Inc., 95 A.2d 446, 25 N.J.Super. 50, affirmed 98 A.2d 604, 26 N.J. Super. 598.

(3) Where employee, who had been awarded compensation for permanent injuries consisting of loss of right index finger, permanent loss of use of right thumb, and serious and permanent disfigurement of face, filed petition for an additional award for partial disability, physician's testimony with respect to injury to and extent of disability in claimant's right arm and hand had no bearing on question whether employee was entitled to additional compensation for partial disability.

Pa.—Bordick v. John Conlon Coal Co., 19 A.2d 536, 144 Pa.Super. 522.

(4) In proceedings on workman's aggravation claim, medical testimony which made no reference to workman's condition or possible aggravation of his condition between terminal dates had no probative value and should not have been admitted.

Wash.—La Plant v. Department of Labor and Industries, 301 P.2d 542, 49 Wash.2d 343.

(5) Workman, seeking additional compensation for aggravation of disability, was properly refused request to read as part of his case in chief testimony of doctors who were witnesses of department of labor and industries and who had testified for department in previous hearings before joint board.

Wash.—Larson v. Dept. of Labor and Industries, 166 P.2d 159, 24 Wash.2d 461.

(6) In proceeding on application to reopen industrial insurance claim to recover compensation for aggravation, no evidence of aggravation prior to last order of supervisor from which no appeal is taken is admissible, but date of such order is one terminal date.

Wash.—Karniss v. Department of Labor and Industries, 239 P.2d 555, 39 Wash.2d 898.

Subjective symptoms

(1) Where existence of aggravated condition attributable to original injury is to be shown by medical opinion, physician may use history obtained from injured person in connection with objective findings he as expert may make by examinations, tests, X-ray pictures, and other appropriate data.

Wash.—Kresoya v. Department of Labor and Industries, 240 P.2d 257, 40 Wash.2d 40.

(2) Aggravation of condition of injured workman attributable to original injury cannot be established by medical opinion which is based on subjective symptoms alone, although opinion may be partially based on subjective symptoms related by injured workman.

Wash.—Kresoya v. Department of Labor and Industries, supra.

(3) While exclusion of history and work record stated to physician by injured person and physician's opinion based thereon was proper, where medical expert's testimony indicated that injury and work history obtained from injured person was sufficiently corroborated by matters objective, expert's opinion based thereon was admissible.

Wash.—Kresoya v. Department of Labor and Industries, supra.

(4) In proceeding to reopen workman's compensation claim, physician's opinion testimony, based on claimant's ex parte history of subjective symptoms during twelve year period between original injury and his second visit to physician, not for treatment, but to qualify physician as witness, was inadmissible as hearsay.

Wash.—Petersen v. Department of Labor and Industries, 217 P.2d 607, 36 Wash.2d 266.

(5) Testimony of compensation claimant detailing his injuries, his pain, his discomfort, and disabling effect of such injuries, was not objectionable as being purely of a subjective character.

Wash.—Omeitt v. Department of Labor and Industries, 152 P.2d 973, 21 Wash.2d 684.

(6) Testimony of physician, who examined compensation claimant, concerning such examination, interpreting X-ray pictures taken of claimant, expressing opinion that claimant could not do any heavy work, and expressing an opinion as to amount of permanent partial disability, was not objectionable as being based solely on what claimant had told physician.

Wash.—Omeitt v. Department of Labor and Industries, supra.

nency of the disability,⁵⁴ and to evidence to prove the cause of such change or continued disability.⁵⁵

On an application for additional compensation, claimant should be permitted to introduce evidence as to the circumstances under which a final receipt was given,⁵⁶ and as to when total disability actually terminated,⁵⁷ in order to fix the time when applicable limitations began to run.

Employer's or insurer's application to decrease or terminate compensation. Similarly, the general rules have been applied, in proceedings on the application of an employer or insurer to decrease or terminate a compensation award, to evidence as to the employee's recovery.⁵⁸

d. Weight and Sufficiency

General rules as to the requisites and sufficiency of evidence apply in proceedings to increase, decrease, or terminate compensation.

Rules governing the degree of proof required, and the weight and sufficiency of evidence, to establish matters in civil actions generally, have been applied, in proceedings to increase, decrease, or terminate compensation, to the proof requisite to the reopening or review of the prior award,⁵⁹ and 54. Mont.—Koski v. Murray Hospital, 56 P.2d 179, 102 Mont. 109.

Evidence held admissible

On application of compensation claimant, who had previously received maximum statutory compensation for total incapacity and specific compensation for injury to right hand, for further compensation because disability was total and permanent, single member, in determining whether claimant's heart condition was traceable to original injury, should consider finding made in previous proceeding that surgical operations necessitated by injury had precipitated heart attack, together with conflicting evidence as to whether effect of injury on heart still continued.

Mass.—Hummer's Case, 59 N.E.2d 295, 317 Mass. 617.

Evidence held inadmissible

A claimant, testifying with respect to a change in condition of injured member for purpose of showing an increase in permanent partial industrial handicap, cannot competently give opinion that condition of injury is permanent, but he may state facts relating to such condition and from such facts, together with other evidence, industrial board may determine question of permanency.

N.J.—Huber v. New England Tree Expert Co., 61 A.2d 59, 137 N.J. Law 549, affirmed 65 A.2d 514, 2 N. J. 53.

Evidence held admissible

(1) In proceeding on application for reopening of claim to obtain further benefits after two prior awards had become final, testimony of medical witness, who had not examined claimants subsequent to last award, was competent on question whether claimant's change in physical condition was attributable to injuries which formed basis for claim sought to be reopened.

Okl.—H & H Supply Co. v. Bryant, 281 P.2d 685, 204 Okl. 515.

(2) In proceeding by employee's guardian to recover additional compensation after employee became insane, testimony of physician that head injuries received by employee in course of employment were a positive factor of his insanity was admissible.

Ohio.—Dean v. Industrial Commission, 81 N.E.2d 813, 86 Ohio App. 105.

(3) In workmen's compensation proceeding, on claim by employee that compensable ankle injury had caused heart ailment which further disabled him, court erred in excluding testimony of physician that he believed there was a causal relationship between plaintiff's ankle and heart ailment although such evidence did not tend to establish all elements of direct or proximate causal relationship.

Ohio.—Fox v. Industrial Commission of Ohio, 125 N.E.2d 1, 162 Ohio St. 569.

(4) In compensation suit, testimony of four physicians who examined employee that operation and treatment for fractured right femur, as well as success of operation, could hardly be improved on and that there was nothing to cause a limp by reason of fracture and plate placed against bone was competent.

Tenn.—Lee v. Aluminum Co., 198 S. W.2d 639, 184 Tenn. 287.

Degrees of disability from particular causes

Where workmen's compensation award had determined that claimant was totally disabled, but that part of disability had been caused by compensable accident and rest by infirmity not connected with accident, claimant was thereafter entitled to apply for hearing to determine whether there had been change in his condition since initial award had been entered and, on such hearing, would be permitted to show, by competent evidence, that degree of disability arising from injury had increased and that degree due to other infirmity had decreased, even though original award had been fully satisfied.

Opinion evidence

In workmen's compensation proceeding, where medical advisory board reported that there were no objective findings to reopen case, and doctor, who had performed a spinal fusion operation on claimant after original award, stated, prior to operation, that claimant's permanent disability rating was twenty-five per cent for body as whole due to upper back injury and thirty-five per cent of left ankle due to malunited fracture present there but, after operation, stated that he had not made explorations to confirm his diagnosis; testimony contained in doctor's letter and medical advisory board's report had to be placed in same category of opinion evidence.

Ariz.—Harris v. Industrial Commission, 251 P.2d 890, 75 Ariz. 71.

64. Effect of rule of liberal construction of evidence

In workmen's compensation proceedings, rule requiring liberal construction of evidence in favor of injured party does not require commission to disregard general rules for judging credibility of witnesses and weight and sufficiency of their testimony, and in denying an award for additional compensation, and in accepting testimony of seven doctors instead of one, commission did not violate rule.

69. Va.—J. A. Jones Const. Co. v. Martin, 94 S.E.2d 202, 198 Va. 370.

Probative evidence as basis

In proceeding for review of compensation award for change in conditions or mistake in determination of fact, a finding of "change of conditions" can be made on any probative evidence of which deputy commissioner might avail himself in determining an original award of compensation.

Mass.—Bethlehem Shipbuilding Corp. v. Cardillo, C.C.A.Mass., 102 F.2d 299, certiorari denied 59 S.Ct. 1042, 307 U.S. 645, 83 L.Ed. 1525.

No new evidence

An employee who had been denied an award of compensation on finding that he had suffered no disability as result of an accidental injury arising in course of employment, and such award became final, was not entitled to an award on application to review award because of a change in conditions, where all evidence at first hearing was before board on subsequent hearing, without any further introduction by either party.

Ind.—Lukich v. West Clinton Coal Co., 10 N.E.2d 302, 104 Ind.App. 73.

Time when change occurred

In workmen's compensation case, if there is competent evidence reasonably tending to support a finding of change in employee's condition after effective date of last prior award, state industrial commission is authorized to find from such evidence date at which change in condition occurred.

Okl.—Warden-Pullen Coal Co. v. Cain, 109 P.2d 487, 188 Okl. 357.

Effect of recency of original hearing

Fact that only about a year elapsed between time of hearing on petition for compensation, and time of hearing on petition for additional compensation, went only to weight of claimant's testimony that there was a change of condition.

son of the partial physical incapacity and that employee was entitled to maximum benefits.

Va.—J. A. Foust Coal Co. v. Messer, 80 S.E.2d 533, 195 Va. 762.

Evidence held insufficient

Evidence sustained finding of department that work assigned by employer to injured employee to whom compensation award had previously been made was of a favored or make-shift nature and did not establish wage-earning capacity of employee for purpose of determining compensation to which he was subsequently entitled.

La.—Mitchell v. T. L. James & Co., App., 176 So. 245—Green v. National Manufacture & Stores Corporation, App., 159 So. 412.

(2) Evidence was held to sustain finding that laborer was a malingerer and was feigning total disability in order to recover further compensation.

La.—Nevills v. Valentine Sugars, 177 So. 586, 188 La. 493.

(3) Evidence was insufficient to support finding that employee did not make honest effort to return to employer's shop and do light work offered her by employer.

R.I.—Fulford Mfg. Co. v. Lupoli, 67 A.2d 846, 75 R.I. 488.

Peak of improvement

Evidence was held to warrant finding that forward progress of claimant's condition of disability had reached its peak of improvement if workmen's compensation board had been authorized to adjudicate such issue.

Ga.—Borden Co. v. Fuerlinger, 98 S.E.2d 410, 95 Ga.App. 556.

Amount of payments made

Evidence of comparative conditions required. Since a claim of increase or decrease in disability is grounded in the comparative condition and ability of the workman, that is, his present condition and ability as compared with that at the time of the original compensation award, the claim must be supported by proofs which permit comparison, and cannot be grounded solely on the estimate of the injured person's present degree of disability.⁹⁵

Evidence as to subjective symptoms. In general, evidence of the injured employee's subjective symptoms, standing alone, or evidence based solely thereon, is not entitled to much weight on the question of the employee's physical condition.⁹⁶

(1) In workmen's compensation proceeding by claimant to reopen his claim and obtain a permanent total disability pension because of alleged aggravation of original injuries, medical testimony, which did not show increased aggravation to claimant's injuries between terminal date of aggravation period, and which merely covered claimant's physical condition as of date of hearing before board of industrial appeals, was insufficient to support judgment allowing a permanent total disability pension.

Wash.—Moses v. Department of Labor and Industries, 268 P.2d 665, 44 Wash.2d 511.

(2) Where, after department of labor and industries made injury award from which no appeal was taken, claimant applied to reopen claim on ground of subsequent aggravation of injury, doctor's testimony before joint board recommending amount of award at higher rating than claimant had ever received had no probative value where it was not directed to period subsequent to award, and did not purport to compare claimant's condition before and after any aggravation but was instead comparison of testimony of different witnesses without regard to time involved.

Wash.—Kleven v. Department of Labor & Industries of State, 243 P.2d 488, 40 Wash.2d 415.

(3) In proceeding to reopen claim because of alleged aggravation of injury occurring subsequent to award made by department of labor and industries, testimony of two doctors who disagreed on degree of claimant's disability did not authorize inference that claimant's condition had improved or worsened to extent of their difference during interval of time between their testimony.

Wash.—Kleven v. Department of Labor & Industries of State, supra.

(4) Where doctor, testifying as to aggravation of injured workman's disability, did not purport to have any personal knowledge of injury involved or of workman's condition at time his claim was closed, but testified as to history of case given him by workman which failed to state what his condition was at time claim was closed, trial court was justified in finding that such testimony failed to establish the alleged aggravation.

96. U.S.—Hudnell v. O'Hearne, D.C. Md., 99 F.Supp. 954.

Not conclusive

In proceeding for further disability compensation under longshoremen's compensation act, deputy compensation commissioner was not obliged to accept as credible claimant's statement as to his physical condition, based only on subjective symptoms, if unwilling to accept statement as correct on whole record before commissioner, including his personal observation of claimant.

U.S.—Hudnell v. O'Hearne, supra.

Claim not sustained

(1) A claim, based on subjective symptoms alone, for aggravation of employee's injuries, is not sustained.

Wash.—Petersen v. Department of Labor and Industries, 217 P.2d

607, 36 Wash.2d 266—Karlson v. Department of Labor and Industries of Wash., 173 P.2d 1001, 26 Wash.2d 310—Cooper v. Department of Labor and Industries, 147 P.2d 522, 20 Wash.2d 429.

(2) An affidavit by physician who had not treated compensation claimant whose subjective symptoms as related to physician were incorporated in affidavit which failed to state that objective conditions found by physician resulted or could have resulted from prior accident more than a year previously was insufficient to sustain burden of proof resting on claimant who sought to reopen compensation award or to create a prima facie case for him.

Ky.—W. E. Caldwell Co. v. Borders, 193 S.W.2d 453, 301 Ky. 843.

To prove existence of objective symptoms, essential to establish incorrectness of supervisor's order fixing workmen's compensation claimant's disability, claimant must produce medical evidence that objective symptoms either had been discovered by a medical expert who mentally noted or physically recorded such symptoms on or prior to closing date or within a reasonable time thereafter, or that objective symptoms had left their own record in or on claimant's body on or prior to closing date.

Wash.—Hyde v. Department of Labor and Industries, 278 P.2d 390, 46 Wash.2d 31.

Fault of employee; obedience to medical advice. The weight and sufficiency of evidence has been determined with respect to evidence as to fault of the employee accounting for continued, increased, or recurrent disability and warranting denial of further or additional compensation,² as in the employee's refusal to take medical advice or submit to surgery,³ or whether the employee acted properly in taking certain medical advice or submitting to surgery.⁴

Application of rules to particular injuries. The above rules have been applied to evidence as to various injuries or disabilities,⁵ such as injury or disability to an employee's back or spine,⁶ injury or

1. Evidence held sufficient

(1) To support finding that claimant's total disability as result of psychoneurosis was contributed to by two separate compensable accidents while working for different employers and order apportioning additional compensation awarded between two employers, as against second employer's contention that claimant's first injury was sole cause of his disability.

Idaho.—Walker v. Hogue, 185 P.2d 708, 67 Idaho 484.

(2) To support finding that acceleration of disease, which had been subject of previous compensation award, was due to exposure occurring while one insurer was on risk and that no part of accelerated results of disease was due to earlier exposure which occurred while another insurer was on risk.

§ 861. Dismissal before Hearing

While a petition for review on the ground of changed condition should not ordinarily be dismissed before hearing evidence, it may be under certain circumstances.

Ordinarily, a petition for review by the board on the ground of change of condition should not be dismissed before hearing the evidence;¹⁷ and constant change of front by applicant employee does not justify such dismissal.¹⁸ An employer's application is properly dismissed, however, at the employee's death when the latter's dependents apply for an adjustment of his compensation.¹⁹

In any event, an order of dismissal will not operate to dismiss a petition filed by claimant's most recent counsel where such order is directed to claimant's former counsel who represented him on an earlier petition.²⁰

§ 862. Hearing or Trial

Where a claimant shows a change in condition a hearing on a timely application for a supplemental award should be granted; and, when possible, the proceeding should be heard by the same commissioner who acted in the original hearing.

Where a claimant shows a change in condition arising subsequent to a previous award and not then considered in fixing the amount of the compensation, a hearing on a timely application for a supplemental award should be granted.²¹ Even if a claimant's motion for a modified or corrected award, on alleged changed conditions, does not present facts sufficient to invoke the jurisdiction of the board or commission, an order refusing jurisdiction is not justified where to sustain the order would be in effect to sustain a general demurrer to the claimant's petition, which, under the local practice, may not be done.²² The industrial commission may not be required to hold a hearing in each case in which payments of compensation have been stopped or suspended, but it is given a wide discretion as to the procedure it will follow and the action it will take properly to protect the parties' rights.²³ One claiming compensation for a temporary disability, while in a hospital after an operation resulting in a diminution of his permanent disability, for which he had been paid full compensation, is not entitled to a formal hearing.²⁴

Where any delay in hearing on a claim for further compensation could have been avoided by the employer if he had asked for a more prompt hearing, the employer is not in a position to complain on jurisdictional or other grounds because of the delay.²⁵ A dependent awarded compensation for the death of the employee is under no obligation to demand a hearing, provided for by statute, before the entry of the commissioner's order stopping compensation on the ground of the misconduct of the dependent.²⁶ Under a statute providing for hearing within a certain time after the date of the accident, the board cannot indefinitely postpone the hearing on an application for a modification of the award.²⁷

Who may hear. Although the question does not seem to be jurisdictional,²⁸ when possible, proceedings to review an award for change of condition should be heard by the same commissioner who acted in the original hearing;²⁹ but, if he deems himself disqualified, he may designate another commissioner to conduct the further hearing.³⁰ A hearing on an application for a modification of a compensation award before a majority of the board is not error.³¹

Instructions. In a proceeding for an increase or diminution of compensation, the instructions should set forth the law correctly³² and be complete.³³ Although the inclusion in instructions, on the function and duty of the board, of the statement that the board consists of representatives of labor, industry, and the public is not prejudicial, it has been recommended that such instruction be dispensed with in the future.³⁴ Where a failure by a claimant to go to the jury on an issue does not infect allegations and evidence with an irremovable taint, the taint, if any, may be removed by instructions to the jury to disregard such allegations and evidence.³⁵

Statutory provision not satisfied

State compensation commissioner's letter, advising deceased employee's widow that formal order, stopping payments of compensation awarded her under workmen's compensation act, would be entered on ground of her immoral conduct, in absence of protest and contrary showing by her within thirty days from date of letter, did not satisfy statutory provisions for written notice to deceased employee's dependents of commissioner's modification or change of his previous orders; and the statute does not require dependent to produce proof within thirty days after notification of commissioner's intention to enter adverse order.

claimant of the intention to reopen the claim. So an additional award cannot be made against an insurance carrier without notice to it and an opportunity to be heard;³⁹ and submission of the cause without notice to the employer and without affording him an opportunity to adduce his evidence, after entry of an order for continuing it for further hearing, is prejudicial error.⁴⁰ Notice to the company doctor by an employee who has sustained an injury constitutes notice to the employer within the statute.⁴¹

Form and sufficiency. The notice of hearing on modification of an award for change of condition has been considered an order,⁴² and should approximate an order of court in its definiteness⁴³ and its form,⁴⁴ and in every case should specifically bring the claim under some one or more of the statutory causes authorizing a modification of an award.⁴⁵ The fact that the notice was not in proper form, however, will not avail the parties on appeal when each of them had such notice as to give him full opportunity to present the issue of modification, and that issue was fully heard and adjudicated without prejudice to any rights which cannot be protected upon the appeal.⁴⁶ Even though a notice that an amendment awarding additional compensation will be made unless good cause to the contrary was shown is error as placing the burden of proof upon the insurance company instead of upon the employee, it will not avoid the award since it is a mere error as to the proper method of procedure.⁴⁷

Waiver. A motion to dismiss the application amounts to a general appearance, and waives any defects in the service of notice of the application,⁴⁸ and an active participation in a rehearing constitutes a waiver of a failure to give notice.⁴⁹ A disabled employee, however, has been held not to waive a defect in the notice by appearing and filing a petition for a rehearing, in the absence of anything in the petition to suggest that he voluntarily relinquished the right to object to the failure to give him a legal notice.⁵⁰

§ 864. — Scope and Extent of Inquiry

On a hearing of the application to review an award on the ground of change of condition, the authority of the commission usually is limited to a readjustment of the amount of compensation, and to this end the commission is authorized to inquire into the nature and degree of the change in the condition of the claimant.

On a hearing of the application to review an award on the ground of change of condition, the authority of the commission is limited to a readjustment of the amount of compensation,⁵¹ and to this end the commission may consider all of the conditions which may in any way have a direct bearing on the rights of the injured employee.⁵² The case is not reopened on the old application,⁵³ and it is not competent to inquire as to the cause of disability⁵⁴ or whether the employee has received compensable injuries.⁵⁵ In the absence of fraud,⁵⁶ the only questions to be considered are as to whether there has been any change shown, subsequent to the previous hearing, in the condition of claimant,⁵⁷ that

True condition

District court on application for additional compensation for permanent partial disability could inquire into workman's true condition, in light of history of case and additional medical evidence, where orig-

is, whether or not the disability has subsequently occurred, increased, diminished, or ended,⁵⁸ and the cause and extent of the change, if any;⁵⁹ and, under some statutes, the hearing applies only to matters going to the basis of applicant's right, and not to amounts or duration of awards.⁶⁰ It has been held that the board or commission is not called on to apply the provisions of a statute relating to the determination of the basis of compensation,⁶¹ and the board is not required to go into a general accounting relative to the payment of money to the employee, not provided for in the award.⁶²

In proceedings brought under a statute providing for a decrease in compensation if an employee compensated for complete disability returns to work or is able to do so and earns or is able to earn as much as or part of what he earned before, the question is not whether the disability has decreased,⁶³ but whether the earning capacity has increased.⁶⁴

§ 865. — Production and Reception of Evidence

On a hearing of an application to review an award on the ground of change in condition, evidence is admissible to show whether or not the disability has recurred or changed as claimed by the applicant.

On a hearing of an application to review an award on the ground of change of condition, a showing which is synonymous with the production of competent testimony is necessary,⁶⁵ and there can be no additional award of compensation where the facts are the same as those considered on the former award.⁶⁶ Evidence is admissible to show whether or not the disability has recurred or changed as claimed by applicant.⁶⁷ He is not permitted to prove his condition from the time of the injury to the time of the hearing,⁶⁸ but only the changes since the former hearing.⁶⁹ Medical experts who testified as to the employee's condition at a prior hearing, if available, have been held to be the only experts competent to testify as to the employee's condition at the time of the later hearing as compared with his condition at the time of the original proceeding.⁷⁰

Evidence of claimant's condition at the time of the original award as shown by such award or by evidence introduced on the first hearing is proper⁷¹ and necessary,⁷² although new evidence of his condition when the first award was made would not inal award for temporary total disability was made operative until claimant should be able to return to gainful occupation.

Undiscovered disabilities

Where employee does not offer to return benefits of compensation award, industrial commission, on application for increase or adjustment of compensation, is limited to inquiry whether new and previously undiscovered disabilities or ailments have developed which could not have been considered originally.

Entire range of disability

Where jurisdiction of commission to make a determination of extent of disability has been properly invoked, commission can properly inquire into entire range of disability. Okl.—Ditmore v. Charles M. Suttle Const. Co., 261 P.2d 590—Malcolm

v. State Industrial Commission, 143 P.2d 823, 193 Okl. 367.

Increase

On an employee's application to compensation bureau for compensation for increased disability, only question for consideration is whether employee has suffered an increase of disability since prior disability award.

Party outside state

Where petition for additional compensation under compensation act was scheduled for hearing, but, before hearing, claimant moved to another state, absolute refusal of board to allow claimant to present his testimony and witnesses in that state was abuse of discretion; and claimant was entitled to have his rights adjudicated without appearing personally before the compensation authorities within the state.

be proper.⁷³ Where evidence from the previous hearing is considered, it should not be done in any manner which will result in any procedural disadvantage to the party affected,⁷⁴ who must be given an opportunity to examine or cross-examine any witness who may have testified,⁷⁵ and to offer evidence supporting his views.⁷⁶ The consideration of a medical examiner's ex parte report without affording an opportunity for cross-examination and for offering testimony to the contrary is not error in the absence of a request therefor.⁷⁷

When a proceeding is reopened, the board or commission is not limited to a reconsideration of evidence already before it.⁷⁸ In reaching the determination as to whether or not a change in condition has occurred, the court or board may consider the entire record,⁷⁹ and it is the duty of the board or commission to consider the evidence on the original hearing and any additional evidence offered on the question of a change in condition.⁸⁰ In some jurisdictions applicant must produce in evidence the record of the former hearing,⁸¹ but in others the testimony on the first application may be considered as evidence without any agreement of the parties and without it being received as evidence in the second hearing,⁸² since such evidence is not ipso facto part of the record on the proceedings as to subsequently increased or decreased disability.⁸³ Where the commission increases the percentage of the claimant's disability on the basis of evidence produced at a final hearing held before a referee who had not conducted former hearings, the examination of evidence

adduced at former hearings is not necessary in the determination of the question of increasing the percentage of disability.⁸⁴

Since a deputy commissioner appointed by the commission to take testimony has no authority to dismiss the case, as discussed infra § 873, when he has attempted to do so, the commission may treat the application as still pending⁸⁵ and consider the testimony taken by him, with that subsequently introduced, in determining the final disposition of the case.⁸⁶

In determining whether there has been a change in condition of the claimant so as to authorize an award increasing, diminishing, or ending the payment of compensation, the board has a right to consider the physical appearance of the claimant at the hearing,⁸⁷ and to have him examined by a physician to determine whether there has been a change in his condition;⁸⁸ and where a claimant submits himself and the injured part of his body to the observation of the deputy commissioner, the commissioner has a right to consider such proof⁸⁹ and to formulate and announce his conclusions with respect thereto.⁹⁰

An opportunity to present rebuttal evidence must be given to a party,⁹¹ and he should be permitted to cross-examine witnesses introduced at the hearing.⁹² Where no objection is made to evidence as being incompetent, it may be considered by the commission as credible.⁹³ Objections to the testimony are insufficient when so indefinite that they do not fairly

§ 866. — Questions of Law or Fact

On the hearing of an application for review of an award on the ground of change in condition, the question whether the disability has recurred or increased or ceased is one of fact, as is the credibility and weight of the testimony.

On the hearing of an application for review of an award on the ground of change of condition, the question whether the disability has recurred or increased or ceased is one of fact,⁹⁵ and so are the questions as to whether the recurring or continued disability resulted from the compensable accident or some other cause,⁹⁶ and as to whether applicant's income is earned or given him in charity,⁹⁷ or what is his earning capacity.⁹⁸ The period within which the commission can reopen a cause which is to be calculated on the basis of disability then existing may become a question of fact for the determination of the commission.⁹⁹ Likewise, whether a former award of compensation was for temporary or permanent disability is a question of fact.¹ Where a physician testifies that the injuries received by an employee were a positive factor of his insanity, the question whether the insanity resulted from the injury is an issue of fact.² The credibility³ and weight⁴ of the testimony in the case are for the commission to decide.

Mixed questions of law and fact. Where there is no dispute as to an employee's condition and extent of his injuries, or that such injury aggravated his pre-existing disease, but the only conflict in the expert opinion concerns the extent to which the accident contributed to his later disability, a mixed question of law and fact is raised.⁵

§ 867. — Findings

- a. In general
- b. Matters which must be found
- c. Conformity to issues and evidence
- d. Construction and effect

a. In General

In a proceeding for increase, diminution, termination, or reinstatement of compensation, findings of fact in support of the decision of the commission are necessary, and a failure to make findings of fact may be fatal to the order of the commission.

In a proceeding for increase, diminution, termination, or reinstatement of compensation, findings of fact in support of the decision of the commission are necessary,⁶ and should be sufficiently specific,⁷ so as to ascertain the extent of claimant's disability,⁸ and the failure to make findings of fact may be fatal to the order of the commission.⁹ Findings of fact and rulings of law should comply with statutory requirements.¹⁰

A verdict in a proceeding for reopening of a compensation claim because of an alleged aggravation has the same force and effect as in actions at law.¹¹

b. Matters Which Must Be Found

In order to support an award of compensation on the ground of a change in condition the award should state the findings as to the changed condition, and when it took place; but a finding that the cause should be reopened and further compensation allowed has been considered a finding of every fact necessary to support the award.

In order to support an award of compensation on the ground of a change in condition the award should state the findings as to the changed condition,¹² that the original injury has caused a new and further disability,¹³ when the changed condition took place,¹⁴ and whether the changed condition is referable to the original injury.¹⁵ Where it is necessary to establish the earning capacity of the employee, the award of the commission is improper where there is no finding as to the actual earning ability of the employee.¹⁶ On the other hand, a finding that the cause should be reopened and further compensation allowed has been considered a finding of every fact necessary to support the award,¹⁷ and that the necessity for a finding whether the actual condition of the claimant is a direct result of the first injury, or the result of independent causes occurring after returning to work, is essential only when a jurisdictional question is involved.¹⁸

6. Fla.—Straehla v. Bendix-We-Lauder-Rite, 81 So.2d 657. Findings of fact and conclusions of law by board, commission, or court in proceedings to secure compensation see supra §§ 627-637.

Liberal construction

Findings of deputy industrial commissioner, in compensation case increasing compensation, should be construed even more liberally than findings of a court, in view of provision that commissioner and his deputy shall not be bound by technical or formal rules of procedure.

Iowa.—Rose v. John Deere Ottumwa Works, 76 N.W.2d 756, 247 Iowa 900.

Findings held sufficient

Deputy industrial commissioner's decision, on a review of a prior award, that claimant failed to prove that, since earlier adjudication of case, there had been such change in his condition as to entitle him to additional compensation, was sufficient to comply with requirement of compensation act that commissioner state his findings of fact and conclusions of law.

Iowa.—Stice v. Consolidated Indiana Coal Co., 291 N.W. 453, 228 Iowa 1081.

Error in finding

On motion by claimant for increase in compensation, based on evidence bearing on finding of average weekly wage prevailing at time of injury in city where injury occurred, and for change of doctors, commissioner erred in finding, of his own initiative, that maximum improvement of claimant's injured foot had been reached, and in making an award terminating weekly payments being made for partial incapacity and in granting claimant in lieu thereof specific compensation on basis of apparent partial loss of foot's function, over objection of claimant on ground that he was not prepared to meet such issue.

18. Ind.—Poke v. Peerless Foundry Co., 119 N.E.2d 905, 124 Ind.App.

In order to support an award of additional compensation for total disability, where the original award was for partial disability, there must be a finding of total permanent disability.¹⁹ Under a statute classifying permanent injuries as total or partial, the findings should designate the proper class of permanent injury, and, if the latter, there should be a finding as to the percentage of disability,²⁰ and a finding that the employee was suffering from "permanent disability" is insufficient to support an award.²¹ Where the second application seeks an award on an entirely new matter, and not for a change in the old condition, a finding as to change of condition is not necessary.²²

c. Conformity to Issues and Evidence

The findings should be supported by the pleadings and evidence.

On an application for review of an award for change of condition, the commission should make findings in accordance with the facts adduced,²³ and a finding of change of condition and an award based thereon cannot be sustained in the absence of an allegation of such change²⁴ or evidence supporting such an allegation.²⁵ The findings may be sufficient even though all of the evidence on which the findings are based is not recited.²⁶ If the evidence shows that the injury was more extensive than had originally appeared, the finding by the commission that the claimant's condition had become worse does not invalidate the additional award.²⁷ Where the evidence discloses a change of condition, findings that there was no change due to the compensable injury and that the change was due to disease and not because of the injury are proper²⁸ and responsive to the issues,²⁹ and are not objectionable as conclusions of law.³⁰

A general finding is in effect a finding of each and every special matter necessary to support the finding.

A general finding of the commission is in effect a finding of each and every special matter necessary to support the finding.³¹ Accordingly, a finding in the second hearing that the employee had a permanent partial disability, when compared with a finding in the previous hearing of a temporary total disability, is, in effect, a finding of a change in condition.³² Also, where a disability award has been made, a subsequent finding of permanent partial impairment is necessarily equivalent to a specific finding that total disability has ceased.³³ Likewise, where there has been an adjudication that the compensation claimant has recovered from his injury and compensation is stopped, a subsequent finding of disability supported by evidence is in itself

Not reversal of former finding

In proceeding by claimant, who had been determined to have ceased to suffer compensable back injury but had been awarded compensation for temporary total disability on condition that there could be later review, for further compensation on ground of recurrence of complete and total incapacity, commissioner's finding, to effect that claimant was suffering from faulty back structure did not constitute a reversal of former finding that claimant had sustained a compensable injury and evidence justified conclusion that there was no change in condition.

Limitations

Absence of finding as to contention that awards were barred by limitations was not a ground for a complaint, since finding that claimant was entitled to further compensation impliedly negated contention.

a finding of a change in condition.³⁴ Where it had been found that the employee was entitled to compensation for only partial disability, a finding at a subsequent hearing that the employee is entitled to compensation for total disability is an adjudication that the employee's condition has changed for the worse and that his earning capacity has been lessened.³⁵

A failure to find that there had been a change in condition is equivalent to a finding that there was no change.³⁶ There is no need to state that there is a change in condition³⁷ or a mistake in the determination of facts³⁸ where the new compensation order makes such disclosure. Where an employee is seeking additional compensation because of a change for the worse, a finding that the evidence shows his condition is materially better is a finding of ultimate fact, and not a conclusion of law.³⁹

Under the facts and circumstances of the particular case, it has been held that a finding that, because of the original injury to one eye, the other has sympathetically become partially disabled is a finding of a change in condition,⁴⁰ that a finding that the employee's injury caused a temporary total disability continuing from a date subsequent to the previous award indefinitely amounts to a finding that the disability had recurred,⁴¹ and that a finding of recurrence and increase of disability refers to a recurrence since the last hearing.⁴² Where it was originally found that claimant was wholly disabled as the result of an accident, a finding in subsequent proceedings by the employer that claimant still remained totally disabled is a sufficient finding that the disability resulting from the accident had not terminated.⁴³

consistent with a prior finding of temporary partial disability, and objectionable as an attempt to correct an error.⁴⁴ A finding that work offered the employee was within his capacity and would advance his recovery is not a final determination that all incapacity had ceased and that the employee was fully competent to do the work offered;⁴⁵ and in view of a subsequent finding of his good-faith attempt, and that he could not go on with work solely because of incapacity, insurer cannot successfully contend that the employee was able to continue the occupation offered.⁴⁶

The findings of fact contained in an order made by the commission, which order has been vacated in its entirety by the court on review thereof, are not binding on the parties in a subsequent proceeding to recover an additional compensation for a change in condition.⁴⁷ A finding that the employee was partially incapacitated does not bar a later finding that injuries, which manifested themselves at the time of the accident and increased in their incapacitating effect at a subsequent date, were compensable.⁴⁸ The view has been taken that a finding of the earning capacity of an employee at the time of the employer's application to stop compensation is conclusive on all the parties in the absence of fraud.⁴⁹

§ 868. Stay of Proceedings

A temporary stay of further proceedings on motion of the employer may be proper procedure where the employer has a good defense to a suit for further compensation, even though applications for further compensation based on a change in condition should be acted on as summarily as possible.

Although applications for further compensation based on a change in condition should be acted on as summarily as possible,⁵⁰ a temporary stay of further proceedings on motion of the employer and on his agreement that payments would meanwhile continue is proper and commendable procedure where the employer had a good defense to a suit for further compensation because of the employee's refusal to report as required by statute for medical examination and treatment offered by the employer, and the employee was without means of support other than the compensation he was receiving, and an adverse judgment would deprive him of such means;⁵¹ and this is so notwithstanding a ruling indefinitely postponed collection of the employee's attorney's fees.⁵² A statute providing that the filing of a petition to terminate or modify an award shall operate as a supersedeas as to the further payments of compensation under the award does not require the trial court to stay and open the liquidated judgment on the award entered before the petition was filed.⁵³

§ 869. Determination or Award

The record in the proceeding should be completed by a formal entry of judgment, which should be entered in accordance with the requirement of the governing statute.

Although the record in a proceeding for additional compensation or to reduce or terminate compensation should be completed by a formal entry of judgment,⁵⁴ there is authority to the effect that the industrial commission is not required to make a formal adjudication in each case in which payments of compensation have been stopped or suspended.⁵⁵ The purpose of a final award is to do adequate justice regardless of the terms of a partial award.⁵⁶

Basis of action

If a letter to the commission constitutes an application for additional compensation because of aggravation of disability, and is filed within the statutory period, the commission cannot prejudice claimant's rights by an order reciting that the commission acted on its own motion.

Opportunity to accept treatment

Where judge announces after claimant's testimony that award will be reduced because of his unreasonable refusal to submit to medical treatment, and record fairly discloses that claimant was given opportunity to undergo such treatment pending entry of order, delay does not post-

If a matter was not raised at the hearing, it is proper to exclude it from the order.⁵⁷ A judgment or award must be entered in compliance with the terms of the governing statute.⁵⁸ The commission has discretion, in considering an award of additional compensation on a permanent basis, to defer its action for a reasonable time to ascertain whether claimant has reached his maximum degree of permanent improvement.⁵⁹

Construction of orders together. Where an order of the commission merely corrects a finding made on a preceding date respecting an application to modify a compensation award and does not involve the consideration of any new matter, and the two orders are directed to the same application, they are required to be construed as one order.⁶⁰

Effect of invalidity. If an order suspending compensation for disability was void, the employee is entitled to compensation until the time when the facts warranting a change in award are found to exist.⁶¹

§ 870. — Conformity to Petition or Application

The award in a proceeding for the review of a previous award because of a change of condition must be consistent with the application or petition.

complaint, not carried into any specific written application, may not be the basis of an order denying the claim on jurisdictional grounds.⁶⁴ Under statutes specifically so providing, a rearrangement of compensation because of changed circumstances cannot antedate the application made therefor.⁶⁵

Statements of a counsel coupled with the admissions in the answer have been held to be sufficient to justify the awarded amount of compensation.⁶⁶

§ 871. — Conformity to Evidence and Findings

The award on application for review based on change of condition should conform to the findings and evidence.

The award on application for review based on change of condition should conform to the findings⁶⁷ and evidence,⁶⁸ and an order is improper when not supported by proper findings⁶⁹ or evidence.⁷⁰ A denial of further compensation because of the employee's ability to work has been held not inconsistent with a finding that the injury had not entirely healed,⁷¹ and the fact that the judgment fixed a definite date of recurrence of the injury, and the evidence did not show a definite date but merely that there was a recurrence after the previous award, is not fatal.⁷²

Where neither applicant nor his attorney appears at a hearing for modification of a compensation award, an order of dismissal is in the nature of a default judgment entered by reason of the failure to appear and prosecute the application, and no evidence is necessary to support the order of dismissal.⁷³

A nunc pro tunc order directing that a previous order concerning additional compensation be vacated has been held not to be void, notwithstanding the absence of a record of the evidence.⁷⁴

§ 872. — Form and Contents

The award on an application for review based on a change of condition need not set forth the facts found by the commission, if, in fact, the record affirmatively shows that there has been such a change; but an award for recurrence of disability should state the time when the compensation payments are to begin.

After a temporary disability has ended, an injured employee is entitled to a clear and concise ruling on the question of whether or not he has any permanent disability as the result of the accidental injury.⁸² Where it is found that total disability has ceased, but that the employee was still partially disabled, the extent and loss of his earning power and the amount of compensation due him because of such partial disability should be determined.⁸³ When the commission reduces or stops compensation for the sole reason that the employee is engaged in a wage-earning employment and without reference to his physical condition, the reason for the award should be specifically stated in order that an undue and unjust burden is not cast on the employee when his employment ceases.⁸⁴ An order of the department of labor is effective, although not signed by the supervisor.⁸⁵

Under the provisions of a compensation law that the compensation should be paid during the full term of disability not to exceed a specified number of weeks, a limitation of maximum weekly compensation payments to a designated number of weeks under the maximum in the award of an additional compensation is erroneous in the absence of a showing of the method by which the award was reached.⁸⁶

§ 873. — Relief Granted

- a. In general
- b. Increase or reinstatement of compensation
- c. Diminution or termination of compensation

a. In General

On review of an award on the ground of change in conditions, if there is competent evidence to justify it in so doing the commission may change its findings, orders, or award in accordance with the facts established at the hearing.

On review of an award on the ground of change in conditions, if there is competent evidence to justify it in so doing, the commission may change its findings, orders, or award in accordance with the facts established at the hearing;⁸⁷ but where it is found that there is no change of condition the previous award must be left in force.⁸⁸ However, even though there is a diminished incapacity, if the wage loss remains total, the award for the total incapacity should be left undisturbed.⁸⁹

The standard by which to determine the award for aggravation, diminution, or termination of disability is the difference between original award and the amount to which the employee would be entitled because of his condition subsequent thereto.⁹⁰ An award covering all of the injuries and deducting therefrom payments already made under the former award is practical and just⁹¹ and not invalid as affecting the former award "as regards any money already paid."⁹² Where the board finds that the employee died from causes other than the accidental injury, the benefits recoverable by his dependents, on an application filed after the death of the employee pending proceedings on application for review of the original award on the ground of a change in condition, are limited to those to which the employee would have been entitled had he lived.⁹³ In a proceeding for increased compensation on the ground of increased disability, claimant has been held chargeable with the cost of treatment not authorized by his employer.⁹⁴

Dismissal. A deputy commissioner appointed by the commission to take testimony has no authority to dismiss the case,⁹⁵ and dismissal of a petition for further compensation "without prejudice" has been held to be beyond the powers of the commission or of a deputy commissioner conducting an arbitration hearing.⁹⁶ The commission is authorized under some statutes to order the suspension of compensation payments, if there exists a disability which reduces the claimant's ability to work, as long as the claimant refuses an employment suitable to his capacity, offered to or procured for him, but the commission is not authorized to dismiss the claim on that account.⁹⁷

Closing case. Under some statutes, the board reviewing an award for change of condition has power to order that its new award shall close the case.⁹⁸

Original award for maximum amount. Where an employee has been awarded the maximum amount for total disability, an additional award cannot be made, but the payments can only be ended or diminished.⁹⁹

Retroactive operation. Ordinarily under the various compensation acts an award ending, diminishing, or increasing the compensation previously awarded may not be made retroactive.¹ Thus it cannot be made effective as of the date of the original award² or the time of final settlement of the former award,³ but it can become effective only as of the date of the new application⁴ or the time the new award is entered,⁵ and claimant cannot be required to account for moneys already paid him under the previous award.⁶ This rule is inapplicable, however, to a case where there was only a partial disability and no review of any previous award,⁷ and the board may make an award retroactive to the date of the original claim where the award made does not affect or change any previous payment.⁸ Likewise, according to some authority, the permitting of a retroactive effect to a supplemental award for an additional period of temporary disability is not illegal as resulting in two concurrent compensations for the same injury where the compensation for permanent disability is computed on the basis of the claimant's life expectancy as of the date of the termination of temporary disability.⁹

b. Increase or Reinstatement of Compensation

When additional compensation is awarded for a change in the employee's condition, the compensation can date only from the discovery of the changed condition, and the subsequent award, in some instances, is limited by the amount of the change in condition since the prior award.

When additional compensation is awarded for a change or new development in the injury, the compensation can date only from the discovery of the changed condition or new development in the injury,¹⁰ and an award for a period of time antedat-

ing the discovery is erroneous.¹¹ Under a statute providing that no increase or rearrangement shall be operative for any period prior to application therefor, the time of formal application is the proper date for commencement of the new award¹² and it is error to award compensation for disability occurring long prior to the application for increased compensation.¹³ Under some statutes a supervisor when making an award on a reopened claim on the ground of aggravation may allow the compensation for all aggravation to the date of his order, and not merely to the date of the application to reopen,¹⁴ and, in view of the appellate nature of proceedings before the board of industrial insurance, an award can be entered only for the aggravation occurring up until the date of the supervisor's order and not to the date of the board's order.¹⁵ Under some statutes it is proper to have the increased payments date from the time of the subsequent award.¹⁶

The subsequent award is limited in amount by the amount of the change in condition since the prior award;¹⁷ and the compensable period has been held to be determined by deducting the time during which compensation was paid under the original award, but not that for which no compensation was paid.¹⁸ It has been held that an award based on change in condition since a former award was made should be based on the change in earning capacity.¹⁹ The commission in increasing the compensation previously awarded is bound by the maximum or minimum of time during which compensation may be paid as provided by the act.²⁰ Where a compensation award is made because of a change in condition, the employer and insurance carrier are given credit for the weeks for which they have paid the employee and not for the amount of money which they have paid him under the previous award,²¹ and an award is not erroneous because refusing the employer credit for moneys paid under the previous award, although the moneys so paid amounted to more than the claimant was entitled to receive under that award.²²

Where an aggravation of the original injury resulted in a permanent disability, under some statutes the prior payment for a permanent partial disability cannot be deducted from the award,²³ notwithstanding the employee's failure to allege the aggravation, where the department, of its own motion, opened the claim on the ground of aggravation;²⁴ but under other statutes, where an award is made for a total permanent disability after a prior award for a permanent partial disability, all payments made on the original award must be considered in determining the amount of the total disability award.²⁵

Where an injured employee suffered a partial permanent disability after the termination of his total temporary disability, the board may make an award for such disability without allowing in addition an award for a partial temporary disability.²⁶ In granting an award for permanent partial disability due to multiple injuries the board must rescind a schedule award previously paid and allow credit for earning capacity from the date of the accident.²⁷ An award for total and permanent disability has been considered to be based on the permanent total disability subdivision of the section of the compensation act dealing with the schedule of compensation, no matter whether the award is made for the first total disability or a total disability which arises on a change in condition after the award has been made for a permanent partial disability.²⁸

Change attributable to several injuries. Where an employee following a supposed recovery from a compensated injury sustains another compensable injury while employed by a new employer, and receives compensation therefor, and thereafter a change of condition arises under which the cause may be reopened, it is proper for the commission to inquire whether the disability found to exist under such changed condition is attributable to the one or the other, or both or neither, of the two accidental injuries.²⁹ Where such disability is found to be attributable in part to each of such injuries, an award should be apportioned against the two employers in the proportion that the disability attributable to each of the two injuries bears to the whole disability found to exist.³⁰ Where the disability is due to the second injury, the claimant is entitled to compensation from the second employer.³¹

c. Diminution or Termination of Compensation

On a proper showing compensation payments may be diminished or terminated.

An employer is entitled to have an award for total disability decreased where the evidence shows that the employee was not totally disabled at the time of the second hearing notwithstanding his testimony that his condition was about the same as when the original award was made.³² So, where the employee's earning power has increased, compensation should be reduced³³ and the employer or insurer allowed to deduct from future payments the amount of overpayments made since institution of the proceedings for modification.³⁴ The view has been taken that the board in passing on a petition to stop compensation, where there has been no change in condition, must consider the average weekly wage of the employee at the time of his injury and his wage-earning capacity at the time of the determination of the board,³⁵ and fix the compensation at an amount limited by the difference between the employee's earning capacity at the time the petition was filed and his actual weekly wages at the time of the injury.³⁶

On application to terminate, compensation should be terminated as of the date on which the disability ceased and not as of the date of the filing of the application.³⁷

Where award has been partly commuted on application of a dependent desiring to leave the country, in subsequent proceedings to reduce the award in accordance with a statute providing for compensation to nonresidents in two thirds of the amount provided in the case of residents the employer is not entitled to a refund of any of the share which had been commuted.³⁸

§ 874. — Conclusiveness and Effect

An order or decree not appealed from, or one affirmed on appeal granting or denying a petition for a modified compensation, constitutes a final determination of the right to compensation on the date of the order, and is res judicata as to the issues determined, but does not preclude further proceedings based on a change of conditions since the date of the award.

Meaning of adjudication

The denial of an award for further compensation, unappealed from, is an adjudication that claimant was not incapacitated as of the date of the hearing, or, if incapacitated, that the disability was not the result of the original injury received.

Mich.—Webber v. Steiger Lumber Co., 34 N.W.2d 516, 322 Mich. 675—Rice v. J. F. Braun & Son, 261 N.W. 84, 271 Mich. 532.

Abandonment of appeal

Order of commission denying application to discontinue payments for compensation on the ground that there has been a change in conditions for the better was not prevented from becoming final by the taking of an appeal from such order and subsequent abandonment of appeal.

In Massachusetts

(1) The former rule that a definite decision of the reviewing board, or of a single member unreviewed, that the employee had fully recovered and that compensation cease, amounted to an adjudication that the employee had no further right and the proceedings could not be revived, was abrogated by statute providing that such a finding should not be considered final as a matter of fact or res judicata as a matter of law. Mass.—Mozetaki's Case, 13 N.E.2d 10, 299 Mass. 370.

(2) Earlier decisions applied the text rule.

71 C.J. p 1463 note 92.

Percentage of increase in aggravation
Although claimant obtained judgment on determination that his condition had become aggravated after his claim had been closed, such judgment was not res judicata on issue of percentage of increase in aggravation in subsequent action by bility.⁴⁷ Consequently, a proceeding for additional compensation on the ground of a continuing disability is not considered as a collateral attack on a judgment denying additional compensation.⁴⁸

A denial of a prior petition to review payments is not res judicata of a later one,⁴⁹ nor is it an approval of a settlement, unless so provided in the order of the department.⁵⁰ Persons not made parties to the application for change of award are not bound by the changes made,⁵¹ such as persons claiming for death benefits under some acts,⁵² and minors not made parties to such an application are not estopped to claim additional compensation by the fact that they received compensation under the award made therein.⁵³ An order is not res judicata on a subsequent claim for a dependent's pension, where the employee's claim was never finally adjudicated, but he was granted a rehearing which was still pending at the time of his death.⁵⁴

Effect. The legal effect of the order suspending compensation until such time as claimant proves a loss of earning power is a finding that the employer is liable for compensation for partial disability in an amount to be ascertained at some future time.⁵⁵ An award stopping compensation which had been granted to claimant constitutes an adjudication that claimant has fully recovered from his injury.⁵⁶

§ 875. Rehearing

The right to rehear proceedings on an application for review of an award based on change of condition is conferred by some statutes, and the matter may rest in the discretion of the compensation commission.

The right to rehear proceedings on an application for review of an award based on change of condition may be conferred by statute,⁵⁷ and the compensation commission may be vested with discretion with respect to granting a rehearing.⁵⁸ Under some statutes where a denial of a claim is on jurisdictional grounds, an application for a rehearing may be allowed,⁵⁹ and the commission has jurisdiction on the rehearing to make an order claimant for permanent total disability pension.

Petition construed

Where employer's petition for termination of workmen's compensation was granted on Oct. 4, 1937, and no appeal was taken from referee's order, but on March 9, 1938, claimant filed rehearing petition, such petition should have been construed as one for rehearing under statute relating thereto rather than one for reinstatement under another statute.

71 C.J. p 1463 note 97 [a].

Extent of injury as matter solely for commission

Order of commission, on claimant's application for additional compensa-

vacating a prior order and ordering that the application for rehearing and all proceedings thereunder be dismissed.⁶⁰ One is not entitled to a rehearing on the ground that new evidence will be offered where there was an opportunity to offer it on a previous hearing;⁶¹ and where evidence is not newly discovered, the bureau of compensation has no jurisdiction, in the absence of fraud, to vacate its judgment more than the statutory time after the entry thereof.⁶²

Rules of the commission as to time of filing the application for rehearing must be observed,⁶³ and an application filed after the expiration of such time is ineffective,⁶⁴ since a claimant cannot revest his right for further hearing by a subsequent application covering the same question;⁶⁵ but these rules may be waived by the commission.⁶⁶ A failure to file an application within the designated time does not deprive the commission of jurisdiction,⁶⁷ nor is the commission divested of continuing jurisdiction by a denial of an application for a rehearing,⁶⁸ and a failure to file a timely application does not preclude the commission from making valid subsequent orders with reference to the claim.⁶⁹ Hence the commission, having found that it made a mistake resulting in injustice, may consider an application for a rehearing, and grant further compensation, although the application was not filed within the required time.⁷⁰ Where a petition for rehearing is to be filed within a certain time after the order, a filing of such a petition is precluded where the commission fails to make any order on a claim for increased compensation,⁷¹ but a provision of the statute giving the effect of a denial of the claim by the commission to its failure to pass thereon within the time prescribed by statute permits a claimant, where there is such a failure by the commission, to file his application for rehearing within the statutory period.⁷²

Where no particular form of application for rehearing is jurisdictional, letters by claimant's counsel to the commission presenting his claim and asking what could be done for him are sufficient to institute the proceedings for rehearing.⁷³

In order to recover on a subsequent petition for further compensation, claimant must prove a change in the condition since the former hearing,⁷⁴ and a tion, that claimant had made a complete recovery from injury, went only to extent of injury, which finding was a matter resting solely with commission and was sufficient to deny claimant a right to a rehearing, notwithstanding added finding that claimant was being compensated for permanent total disability under a prior claim, which added finding recognized that claimant was being compensated to greatest extent contemplated by compensation act and that second injury could not increase total disability.

Ohio.—State ex rel. Holcomb v. Industrial Commission, 60 N.E.2d 814, 75 Ohio App. 349.

Jurisdictional grounds not shown

Where order of commission dismissing application for modification of award pointed out that over a period of several years claimant had made no mention of alleged condition of left hand, there was no rejection of claimant's application on "jurisdictional grounds" within statutory provision authorizing a rehearing within thirty days after denial of compensation because of lack of jurisdiction.

Ohio.—State ex rel. White v. Industrial Commission of Ohio, App., 40 N.E.2d 453.

Finding of commission on application for additional compensation that claimant had been fully compensated was not finding that commission had no further jurisdiction within statute providing for rehearing and appeal.

Same cause of injury

Where compensation claimant failed to take necessary steps seeking a rehearing within thirty days after notice of dismissal of application for modification of an award of compensation for temporary total disability for an injury to both eyes, a second application relating to same cause of injury would not revest claimant's rights for further hearing, notwithstanding first application related to impairment of left eye, whereas second application referred to an impairment of right eye.

Rehearing justified

In proceeding for further compensation after employer refused further consequent lessening of his earning ability.⁷⁵ Claimant has been held to have the right to examine all of the files and the records in his case on which the bureau based its decision to terminate the award, when necessary to prepare for the hearing on his application.⁷⁶ Where a deputy commissioner, in passing on an application for modification of a compensation award, has before him important evidence which was not before another commissioner who had previously refused to modify the award, the second commissioner has jurisdiction to modify the earlier award on the ground of a mistake in a determination of fact.⁷⁷

A refusal to reopen the case solely because a former application on the same ground was denied is erroneous, where the former decision was not on the merits, since one is entitled to a hearing on the merits.⁷⁸ A denial of an employee's petition for a rehearing, signed by some of the members of the board, is not invalid even though such members purport to sit as the board, where jurisdiction to grant a rehearing is vested in a single member of the board and not in the board as such.⁷⁹ A determination by a reviewing board, without hearing evidence that an employee's petition for a rehearing should be dismissed as without merit and frivolous, is improper where the lack of merit does not appear on the face of the petition.⁸⁰

§ 876. Suspension of Order

Where a statute so provides, a compensation order may be suspended or set aside through injunction proceedings brought in the courts by any party in interest.

Under a statute providing that a compensation order may be suspended or set aside through injunction proceedings brought in the courts by any party in interest against the commissioner making the order, the employer and insurer are not necessary parties to an action to suspend an order reducing compensation,⁸¹ and where the court, out of an abundance of precaution, directed them to appear and show cause why the relief should not be granted, a motion by them to dismiss because the action was not commenced as against them within the statutory time limit is not well taken, where the proceedings were timely instituted against the commissioner.⁸²

The right to appeal from an adverse determination in proceedings to increase, diminish, terminate, or reinstate compensation is purely statutory.

The right to appeal in cases of this character depends on the terms of the governing statute;⁸³ and the various statutes frequently contain a provision for appeals from adverse decisions,⁸⁴ and the right to appeal may be a matter of right.⁸⁵ A proceeding for additional compensation is a distinct proceeding from which an independent appeal may be taken.⁸⁶ The mere perfecting of an appeal to the court from a modified award of the commissioner does not operate to reinstate a former award.⁸⁷ The denial of the right to compensation for aggravation of disability occurring or discovered after the rate of compensation has been established or compensation terminated is appealable.⁸⁸

Error of law

The proceeding may be subject to the general rules of law relating to appeals,⁸⁹ and the errors complained of will not be noticed unless brought to the attention of the appellate court through the proper procedure.⁹⁰ The review is limited to the issues tendered in the application for review,⁹¹ and on review the inquiry is limited as to whether disability resulting from the injury may have increased or diminished beyond what the award contemplated.⁹² The theory of the case as tried in the lower tribunal will be adhered to on appeal.⁹³

The pendency of an appeal does not deprive the board of jurisdiction to entertain another application for an additional compensation because of a changed condition arising since the hearing on which the award appealed from was based.⁹⁴ Where an appeal has been refused, appellant is not allowed to use another mode of appeal for making the same contentions and raising the same issues,⁹⁵ and claimant cannot have pending at the same time, in the same compensation proceeding, an appeal from the order of the board, involving a question of the sufficiency of the award, and an appeal from an order regarding a question of aggravation of his condition.⁹⁶ Where an alleged error is invited by appellant, he cannot be permitted, on appeal, to urge that point.⁹⁷

Further review. An order overruling a so-called demurrer, which in fact was a motion to dismiss an application by an employee to vacate a judgment finding that he had fully recovered from his injuries, cannot be reviewed by certiorari before the determination of the application.⁹⁸ Where the court has found that an employee was totally incapacitated and that it was reasonable to require him to submit to a curative operation, and the employee sought certiorari to quash an order pursuant to which compensation was terminated because of the employee's failure to submit to the operation, certiorari will be granted to hear on the merits the question of whether the employee, later offering to submit to the operation, may have it performed and have the necessary expenses relating thereto paid by the employer.⁹⁹ Furthermore, the employee is not precluded from attacking the order by certiorari as against the contention that the employee has an adequate remedy through a petition to the administrative authorities.¹

Costs. Where there is uncertainty as to whether or not an employee has a cause of action for an additional compensation, it has been held that the employer should bear the cost of a judicial determination that the employee is not entitled to such compensation.²

quired only in the statutory manner and after the compensation board has passed on the question to be decided.

Appellant must conform to the statute in order to give the appellate court jurisdiction,³ which can be acquired only in the manner pointed out by the statute⁴ and after the board has passed on the question to be decided.⁵ Under express statutory provision, a court which has jurisdiction over neither the place where the accident occurred nor the person of the appealing party is without authority to decide the appeal.⁶ What particular tribunal has jurisdiction of the appeal is determined by the statute.⁷ Where the statute provides that an appeal by the beneficiary shall be to the court of the county in which claimant resides, there must be a compliance with such statute.⁸

Ohio.—McManus v. Industrial Commission of Ohio, 31 N.E.2d 465, 66 Ohio App. 14.

Decision held not interlocutory

A decision of board that additional compensation was chargeable against employer, and not against special fund for reopened cases, was not interlocutory but was appealable where decision established liability for further treatment, provided a factual connection with prior injury mission may not complain of informalities in such final action.¹⁰ Where the statute provides that appeal may be taken from the decision or findings of the commission, a mere letter which, although characterized as a decision, is merely a narrative of past occurrences does not constitute a decision within the meaning of the statute.¹¹

Whether a decision is reviewable depends on the construction of the particular statute involved.¹² A determination on a petition to review and modify an award previously made is an appealable order,¹³ since whether the application for additional compensation was refused in a proper exercise of discretion raises a question of law.¹⁴ A decree fixing compensation is appealable,¹⁵ as is an order denying a reopening of a compensation proceeding¹⁶ because of an erroneous belief that the commission was without jurisdiction to review the claim on its own motion,¹⁷ or where it is a denial of a right to a hearing by the commission on a question not previously presented and decided.¹⁸ Likewise, if the refusal of further compensation is based on jurisdictional grounds, under some statutes the decision is appealable.¹⁹

Under some statutes, the right of appeal is granted from any order of the commission which terminates, diminishes, or increases its former award if such former award was not made by the commission on its own motion pursuant to its continuing jurisdiction.²⁰ Orders made on the commission's own motion pursuant to its continuing jurisdiction, however, are not appealable.²¹ While an application is pending, the commission may not ignore or fail to dispose of it and claim to be acting on its

Not within continuing jurisdiction

Where pursuant to claimant's letter which did not constitute a petition for rehearing, commission increased final award at a time within which claimant might have filed petition for rehearing, increased award was not in exercise of commission's continuing jurisdiction within statute rendering nonappealable orders made on commission's own motion pursuant to its continuing jurisdiction, and hence order increasing award was appealable.

Commission's order challenged

Where workman had filed application for additional compensation by reason of aggravation of injuries but commission's order stated that order was made on commission's own motion, statement in workman's petition for rehearing that "based upon such application the said commission entered an order" challenged commission's statement that order was entered on its own motion, with respect to workman's right to appeal.

Or.—Hinkle v. State Industrial Acc. Commission, 97 P.2d 725, 163 Or. 395.

own motion in awarding additional or increased compensation with the result of preventing the workman from appealing from any subsequent ruling modifying the commission's order so entered.²² Where the commission's order was made pursuant to the workman's application for additional compensation and not on the commission's own motion, a subsequent order terminating the previous order is an appealable order, notwithstanding the subsequent order was made on the commission's own motion.²³

In the absence of a statute providing otherwise, a determination that the injuries have been fully compensated by allowance previously made is not reviewable,²⁴ and no appeal lies from a determination refusing to allow compensation for a physical condition undisclosed at the time of previous hearings and now discovered;²⁵ and an order of the board reopening a compensation proceeding is not appealable as a final order.²⁶ A decision by the commission has been held not appealable if the refusal of further compensation is based on a determination of the question of the extent of disability²⁷ or the amount of award.²⁸ No appeal lies from the refusal of the commission to act on an application for aggravation of a compensable injury not filed within the required time;²⁹ and, with respect to a question which the commission has once determined, none of the parties has a right to appeal from a refusal to comply with a demand that the case be reopened.³⁰

Presentation and reservation in lower court of grounds of review in general see Appeal and Error § 228 et seq.

Failure to submit requested instruction

In proceeding for increased compensation for permanent partial disability because of loss of sight of one eye by aggravation, industrial accident commission, failing to submit to circuit court requested instruction to jury as to meaning of "aggravation," cannot complain of failure of court to give instruction defining such term on commission's properly preserved for review relate to jurisdiction.³² Likewise, an issue is reviewable where such issue, although not mentioned in the petition to stop compensation, was included in the claim of appeal from the deputy to the board which passed thereon without objection.³³ A pleading, the definiteness or sufficiency of which was not tested by motion or demurrer, may be sufficient on appeal to sustain a finding, even though defective.³⁴

§ 881. — Time for Taking and Perfecting Proceeding for Review

Proceedings for review must be taken and perfected within the prescribed statutory time.

The time within which a proceeding to review the action of the lower tribunal must be prayed, taken, and perfected is regulated by statute, and the proceeding must be taken and perfected within the prescribed statutory time,³⁵ and the rule is applicable to cross appeals.³⁶ The time for filing the appeal dates from the time of the denial of the application for a modification of the original award.³⁷ Where an extension of time to appeal is permissible, it has been held that the application for the extension must be made within the time originally fixed for the appeal;³⁸ and the grant or denial of an extension is, in a very large measure, a matter of discretion.³⁹

§ 882. — Record

The reviewing court usually will not consider matters which are not in the record before it.

The reviewing court is ordinarily required to consider the entire record.⁴⁰ Although the reviewing court may not consider matters which do not appear from the record,⁴¹ in a proper case it may consider appeal from judgment awarding compensation claimed.

Interpretation

Where an award was entered in 1934, stopping compensation, and subsequently an award of additional compensation was made and employer in application for review of award presented as a ground for review contention that claim was barred under res judicata doctrine, because of 1934 award statement of ground for review would be interpreted as properly presenting issue that 1934 award prevented making of allowance for compensation for period prior to that time, although statement might be interpreted to mean that claim of employer was that award was conclusive on claimant's right to any further award.

Mich.—Murray v. Ford Motor Co., 296 N.W. 284, 296 Mich. 348.

Statute not applicable

Statutes providing that in a workmen's compensation proceeding, an appeal from an award must be taken to supreme court within thirty days after copy of award has been sent to parties, had no application in proceeding by widow for death benefits from firemen's retirement fund, in view of fact that fireman's failure to appeal from an adverse decision on his application for additional compensation could not render res judicata his widow's claim for death benefits coming into existence upon decedent's death.

the record of a previous appeal as a part of the record.⁴² If the commission makes conclusions on its own observation, it has been held that its observation must be recorded so that the appellate court can tell whether there was evidence by ocular preference on which the commission could make a finding.⁴³ In the absence from the record of the evidence on the hearing for the first award an award of increased compensation because of changed conditions since such award cannot be reviewed.⁴⁴

Where the time for filing the stenographic report or agreed statement of facts is prescribed by statute, there must be a compliance with such statute;⁴⁵ otherwise a statement of facts will be stricken.⁴⁶ Where a statement of facts is stricken for untimely filing, the departmental record will not be stricken as a part thereof, since it is a part of the record on appeal.⁴⁷ A court may consider questions of law pertaining to terminal dates involved in an application to reopen the claim on the ground of aggravation without a statement of facts.⁴⁸

Where the record discloses that claimant failed to give timely notice of appeal from a supervisor's order to the compensation board, the burden is on him to challenge the existence of the apparent imperfection of his proceedings.⁴⁹

§ 883. — Dismissal

An appeal will not be dismissed on the ground that the time for taking an appeal from a prior judgment has expired.

In a proper case, an appeal may be dismissed by the court.⁵⁰ An appeal will not be dismissed on the ground that the time for taking an appeal from a prior judgment has expired.⁵¹

§ 884. — Evidence and Matters Considered

On review of an award on a petition seeking additional compensation, the court may consider the evidence, claim, and finding at the original hearing, and the evidence at the hearing in the proceedings seeking the additional compensation.

It has been held that, on review of an award on a petition seeking additional compensation, the court may consider the evidence, claim, and finding at the original hearing,⁵² and the evidence at the hearing in the proceedings seeking the additional compensation.⁵³ It has also been held that the entire transcript certified by the commission may be admitted although the transcript contains reports incompetent under rules of evidence at common law.⁵⁴ Where there are no findings of fact, the court may consider a résumé of the evidence attached by stipulation of the parties to the return in certiorari in order to ascertain if the facts necessarily inferred from the award as presumptively found have any evidential support.⁵⁵

On the other hand, it has been held that the court should not consider a rule of the commission not pleaded or appearing in the record,⁵⁶ nor can the employee relitigate questions arising out of the facts, circumstances, and conditions surrounding the injury, existing and known at the time of decision on the original application, from which he did not appeal.⁵⁷

Limited scope of review

In compensation proceeding, where statement of facts was stricken for untimely filing, and departmental record was presented, assignment of error based on finding of fact would not be considered, since appellate court could not say on what evidence trial court based its findings or that findings were based solely on departmental record, but was required to assume that trial court acted on sufficient evidence, and could only consider whether findings and conclusions supported judgment.

The court may properly consider matters which were before the compensation board for determination when it made its award;⁵⁸ and the appellate court is not restricted to a consideration of the matters raised by the employee's application to rehear his claim where the compensation board broadened the scope of the rehearing and awarded compensation for an injury which was not within the claim made in the application for rehearing.⁵⁹

§ 885. — Presumptions

There is a presumption in favor of the regularity and correctness of the proceedings and determinations made below, and the burden is cast on the party who asserts the contrary.

In the absence of any evidence to the contrary, the court, on review, will presume that the findings of fact made by the commission were supported by competent evidence⁶⁰ and that the issues were decided correctly.⁶¹ The usual presumptions of the regularity of the proceedings below,⁶² and that public officers performed their duty,⁶³ will be indulged. The decision will be considered, prima facie, to be correct,⁶⁴ and the burden of proof rests on the party attacking the decision.⁶⁵

An order that claimant is not entitled to further compensation is presumed, in the absence of a showing to the contrary, to be based on the fact that claimant has been adequately compensated⁶⁶ rather than on the fact that there is a lack of jurisdictional facts.⁶⁷ It has also been presumed that such an order is an action final in its nature,⁶⁸ going to some basis of claimant's right.⁶⁹ Where the commission on its own motion entered an additional award, it must be assumed, on review, that the commission believed that a mistake had been made.⁷⁰

Where no finding was made that the injury was the result of an accident, it must be assumed that the occurrence did not involve an accident or fortuitous circumstance.⁷¹ Where the commission fails either to deny or to award compensation for a certain injury, it will be presumed that the commission did not consider such injury.⁷² Where plaintiff's request for increased compensation had not been disposed of as provided by law, it must be presumed that the action of the commission allowing further compensation was taken with respect to his request.⁷³

In the absence of testimony to the contrary, plaintiff's testimony is to be accepted as true,⁷⁴ and the evidence and the reasonable inferences to be drawn therefrom will be stated in the light most favorable to applicant.⁷⁵

On further review there is a presumption in favor of the correctness of a decision of the lower court which in effect affirmed the action of the compensation authorities.⁷⁶

§ 886. — Matters of Discretion

Matters within the discretion of the lower tribunal are not reviewable unless there has been a clear abuse of discretion.

Testimony before examiner

Decision of department of labor and industries in compensation case does not have same presumptive effect when testimony is before examiner as where it is taken before one or more members of board, notwithstanding statute providing that department's decision must be considered as prima facie correct.

Abuse of discretion

One who seeks to attack decision of commission declining to reduce or suspend compensation must show that commission abused its discretion.

76. U.S.—Bethlehem Shipbuilding Corp. v. Cardillo, C.C.A.Mass., 192

In accordance with the rule on the review of civil cases generally, matters within the discretion of the lower tribunal are not reviewable⁷⁷ unless there has been a clear abuse of discretion.⁷⁸ While it is generally held that the board or commission is vested with certain discretion under a statute permitting it to reopen a case or rescind, alter, or amend its orders,⁷⁹ including the power to authorize cessation of payments retroactively,⁸⁰ there is authority that a modification or change with respect to former findings and orders is not purely discretionary and beyond the right of appeal.⁸¹ It has even been held that the duty to award increased compensation is not discretionary⁸² and contains no element of discretion not associated with the duty to award compensation in the first instance.⁸³

§ 887. — Questions of Fact and Sufficiency of Evidence

The finding of the board or commission on a question of fact is conclusive, and such findings will be sustained on review if supported by the evidence.

In the same manner as a trial judge's findings⁸⁴ or a jury's verdict,⁸⁵ the finding of the board or commission on a question of fact is conclusive,⁸⁶ in the absence of fraud.⁸⁷ Otherwise expressed, the findings of the board or commission will be sustained on review if supported by the evidence,⁸⁸

credibility⁹⁹ of the evidence and whether the burden of proof is sustained¹ is solely for the compensation board or commission, and, accordingly, the court will not weigh conflicting evidence.²

The court, however, is not bound by the reasoning of the commission or commissioner.³ If the conclusions of the commission or commissioner are unsupported by any competent⁴ or substantial⁵ evidence, or are based on conjecture or surmise,⁶ they are reviewable, where they go to essential facts on which the petition is based.⁷ Where there is an implied finding of fact, the court may search the testimony to ascertain if the necessary inferred facts

presumptively found have evidential support.⁸ A finding by the board as to the cause of the employee's incapacity does not preclude the court on review from examining into the cause of a later incapacity as to which the employee's rights were reserved.⁹

In passing on a question as to the sufficiency of evidence, the court must consider evidence in the light most favorable to claimant.¹⁰

The matter of limitations of time for reconsideration and modification of a compensation award is a question of law reviewable by the courts,¹¹ and a question whether just cause has been shown for

Not erroneous as matter of law

In proceeding to recover additional compensation for claimant's aggravated condition resulting from original injury, commissioner's award denying conditional compensation could not be held erroneous as a matter of law, where evidence was in dispute as to claimant's condition, and also as to whether examining physician's report had been examined by entire board.

Evidence accepted at its face value

On appeal from judgment granting claimant additional compensation on ground of aggravation of disability, supreme court must accept evidence offered by claimant at its face value.

opening up the case is a mixed question of law and fact.¹²

§ 888. — Harmless Error

The court will disregard error which does not affect the substantial rights of the party complaining.

The general rule that on review of civil actions the court must disregard error which does not affect the substantial rights of the party complaining applies on review of proceedings to increase, diminish, or terminate compensation;¹³ but only error of a prejudicial nature may result in reversal.¹⁴ Accordingly, appellant may not complain of an error which is favorable to himself,¹⁵ and an error is not prejudicial to claimant where the judgment is in his favor.¹⁶

The general rule that there will be no reversal because of harmless error has been applied to error in refusing to allow the taking of the depositions,¹⁷ the admission¹⁸ or exclusion¹⁹ of evidence, the giving of instructions,²⁰ and the use of discretion.²¹ An alleged error to the effect that the board acted on its own motion to correct its own error, whereas the case was reopened on claimant's motion, is not ground for reversal where the employer was duly notified of all the proceedings and took part therein.²² A voluntary appearance before the commission without a counsel is harmless if there is no prejudice.²³

§ 889. — Trial De Novo

Where authorized by statute, there may be a trial de novo in the court of questions of fact.

While a trial de novo is not proper where the only question involved is the discretion of the commission as to the amount of the award²⁴ or where the findings are not jurisdictional,²⁵ there are some questions of fact on which, under some statutes, such a trial is authorized,²⁶ such as facts concerning injury, its extent, and the measure of relief to be awarded to claimant.²⁷ Where the board erroneously denied a hearing on a petition for additional compensation on the ground that it was without jurisdiction, the court on appeal may be authorized to conduct a hearing, examine witnesses, and enter a judgment,²⁸ particularly where there is no substantial dispute as to the facts.²⁹

Under some statutes on a trial de novo the court may receive testimony in addition to that received before the compensation board or commission;³⁰ but under other statutes the case must be tried and submitted on the record of the proceedings before

Under some statutes, the burden is on claimant to overcome the prima facie case made by an order closing the claim.³⁹ He must prove that the amount of compensation is inadequate,⁴⁰ and that there has been an aggravation of his injuries.⁴¹ Under the pleadings of the case, the burden may be on the employee to prove that a prior award was set aside on a showing of changed conditions, mistake, or fraud.⁴² Findings by the court which are not with-give claimant a rating of disability then fixed by the board.⁶⁰

In accordance with the general rule on review of civil cases, a decision on a former appeal is the law of the case.⁶¹ A voluntary dismissal, however, is not res judicata of a subsequent appeal.⁶² The board's affirmance of a referee's termination of compensation is conclusive where no appeal is taken therefrom.⁶³

2. REINSTATEMENT

§ 891. Power to Reinstate

After an order denying further compensation, the commission has jurisdiction to reopen the case and award additional compensation on proof of a change in condition, or where neither the employee nor the commission was aware of injuries causing continuation of disability.

After an order denying further compensation, the commission has jurisdiction to reopen the case⁶⁴ and award additional compensation⁶⁵ on proof of a change of condition,⁶⁶ or where neither the employee nor the commission was aware of injuries causing continuation of disability.⁶⁷ The fact that a claimant allowed an award terminating his compensation to go against him, owing to his inaction, does not prevent the board from reinstating his compensation on proof that his disability has continued or recurred.⁶⁸ Claimant has the burden of proving a recurrence of disability warranting reinstatement of an award;⁶⁹ but where an employee's compensation payments were discontinued because he was able to procure employment, and not because there had been a change in his condition, on his loss of the employment and subsequent application for reinstatement of compensation payments he does not have the burden of proving a change in his physical condition.⁷⁰

The commission, finding that temporary total disability has ceased, has no authority to make a further finding precluding the employee from recovering for disability thereafter resulting from the injury.⁷¹ On the other hand, if claimant does not commence proceedings to review the order discontinuing compensation⁷² within the proper time,⁷³ or there is no showing of a change of condition,⁷⁴ the case cannot be reopened. Under some statutes, where there has been a disallowance of a claim, there can be no reinstatement.⁷⁵

Return of moneys

Where order of compensation bureau, that money paid by city under award for compensation of aged and illiterate employee be paid over to department of labor officials for distribution, was not complied with, but claimant's attorney retained bulk of money paid, city's action in procuring return of such moneys was necessary, and was not ground for reinstating award against city which had been set aside.

Statute construed

Under workmen's compensation act, section authorizing board to reinstate at any time an award, and section permitting board to grant a rehearing on any petition on which board has made an award or disallowance, are mutually exclusive, in view of proviso of latter section that nothing contained therein should limit or restrict right of the board as conferred by former section, so that former section applies only where an award is still in existence or has been suspended or terminated, and latter section applies to disallowances as well as awards.

Statutory omission not oversight

Omission of word "disallowance" from section of act providing for reinstatement, at any time, of an award, was not an oversight.

§ 892. Conclusiveness of Former Decision Terminating Compensation

As a general rule, the jurisdiction of a petition for reinstatement based on a recurrence of disability due to an accident is not ousted by a previous decision in which a recurrence was not an issue, but only where the identical question is raised.

As a general rule, the jurisdiction of a petition for reinstatement based on a recurrence of disability due to an accident is not ousted by a previous decision in which a recurrence was not an issue;⁷⁶ but where the petition for reinstatement raises the identical question determined in the adjudication had on a petition for review, the decree on the petition for review deprives the referee of jurisdiction.⁷⁷ So, an unappealed decree of the commission terminating compensation is res judicata as to fact findings on which it is based, on the employee's subsequent petition for further compensation,⁷⁸ but a decision which is not a final determination has been held not to prevent a later hearing and grant of compensation,⁷⁹ and a finding that the employee is not entitled to further compensation by reason of changed conditions has been held not to prevent the allowance of increased compensation at a later date because of changed conditions.⁸⁰ A determination that total disability had ceased will not prevent recovery of further compensation on recurrence of total disability,⁸¹ as the cessation of total disability might have been only temporary or apparent.⁸²

§ 893. Time for Application

An application for reinstatement should be timely made.

Under some statutes, a petition for reinstatement because of recurrent disability must be filed within a certain time after the last payment of compensation.⁸³ An injured employee is not required on recurrence of total disability after apparent cessation thereof to apply for reinstatement within a year after total disability has prima facie ceased, where the statute does not so provide.⁸⁴ A motion in the commission to review an order of the commission discontinuing an award on the ground of changed conditions is unauthorized and does not affect the time for beginning proceedings in court.⁸⁵

§ 894. Relief Granted

One who applies for the reopening of a closed claim is not entitled to compensation for the period prior to filing the application.

A claimant who applies for the reopening of a closed claim for aggravation of disability is not entitled to compensation for the period prior to filing the application.⁸⁶ A referee's order dismissing a petition to reinstate compensation on the ground that the proper procedure was to file a petition for a rehearing with the compensation board is erroneous where there has been no action by the board on which a rehearing could be had.⁸⁷

Ground for complaint

Fact that employee, whose disability changed from partial to total after expiration of period for which he was awarded and paid disability compensation, filed no petition for rehearing as to compensation for partial disability during interim and total disability thereafter, was no ground for complaint by employer in proceeding for reinstatement of compensation on ground that employee's disability had recurred.

§ 895. Review

A petition for review must be timely.

It has been held that, on claimant's appeal from an order refusing reinstatement after termination of an allowance, the commission should formally traverse the facts alleged by claimant, and thus raise a clearly defined issue.⁸⁸ The court will not review the board's original award on appeal from a judgment confirming an order reinstating it, in the absence of a timely petition for review.⁸⁹

B. AGREEMENTS AND SETTLEMENTS

§ 896. Right and Power to Modify or Set Aside

As a general rule, a compensation agreement or settlement may be reviewed because of a subsequent change in the condition of the employee, and the compensation provided for by agreement may be increased, decreased, terminated, or suspended.

In most jurisdictions,⁹⁰ if a compensation agreement or settlement has been entered into between the parties and thereafter there is a change in the condition of the employee, on proper application or petition, the agreement or settlement may be reviewed, and compensation may be increased or diminished,⁹¹ or the payment of compensation may be suspended or terminated.⁹² This is particularly true

Statute for benefit of employee and employer

Statute relating to review of compensation agreements or awards is for benefit of employee and employer and applies where employee's disability has recurred or increased within eighteen months from time of agreement or award or where disability has ceased, and a recurrence, increase, diminution, or termination of an employee's disability is only question open on a petition for review.

Nothing but suspension warranted

Where a disability agreement has been made which contemplated payments for a period of five hundred weeks, and within this period, because of a change in physical condition of employee, employer is relieved from making payments by action of the compensation board, relief employer receives is merely suspension of payments awaiting further developments.

where the agreement itself expressly provides for a review on the ground of a change in condition;⁹³ or where it is shown that the agreement for compensation was entered into by the employee with the distinct understanding that the entire case might be opened for review in the event there was a change in his condition.⁹⁴ The express reservation of a right of review will not confer that right unless it exists by statute.⁹⁵

Under some compensation acts, it is within the discretion of a compensation board or commission whether an award of compensation which is based on a stipulation between the parties will be set aside because of a change in the condition of the employee, and a determination by a board or commission on a petition to set aside such an award because of change in the employee's condition will not be disturbed in the absence of any showing of abuse

If a review of a compensation agreement or settlement is sought on the ground of change in the condition of the employee, a change in condition must be shown,⁹⁷ and the change in condition must be such that lessens the earning capacity of the employee.⁹⁸ The change in the physical condition of the employee must be causally connected with the original compensable accident,⁹⁹ and there can be no review for incapacity caused by a new, separate, and different injury.¹

Under some compensation acts, compensation in addition to that provided for by agreement may be awarded where a change occurs in the condition of the employee which manifests itself in injuries which were not expressly enumerated in the original agreement or award which was based on the

Additional compensation for separate disability

Where an employee had received full compensation for loss of use of a leg, he would be entitled to additional compensation only by establishing that there were other specifically identified parts of his body which were affected as a direct result of injury which resulted in loss of use of leg and that other parts of body affected resulted in a disability separate, apart, and distinct from disability which followed loss of use of leg.

agreement.² Under other compensation acts, a change in the employee's condition which will justify a review of the agreement is a change which results from the injuries mentioned or described in the agreement;³ and an award of additional compensation may not be made for a new and different injury from the one described in the agreement.⁴ Where an employee sustained several injuries from one compensable accident, and the agreement for compensation referred to only one injury, there can be no review of the agreement because of a change in the employee's condition which resulted from the injury which was not mentioned in the agreement.⁵ Thus, if an agreement for compensation refers only to hernia as the cause of disability, a proceeding to review will not be justified for a change in the condition of the employee which results from a condition of the employee's leg, even though the condition of the leg was the result of the hernia.⁶

Where an agreement is entered into for compensation for physical injuries, and thereafter the disability of the employee continues because of a neurotic condition which was caused by the physical injuries, the neurotic condition may constitute the necessary change in condition which is required for an award of additional compensation,⁷ and the neurotic condition will not constitute a new and different injury.⁸ Further compensation may be awarded for the neurotic condition,⁹ even though it might have been within the power of the employee to have avoided the development of the neurotic condition.¹⁰

It has been held that if an agreement for compensation must be approved by a board or commission, the agreement may be abrogated only by action taken by the board or commission.¹¹ However, an agreement may be modified because of an increase or decrease of disability without an adjudication on the part of the compensation board or commission as to the extent of disability, and merely by a subsequent agreement properly approved.¹²

If the employee's disability ends prior to the expiration of the time fixed by an approved agreement for the payment of compensation, the employer has the right to have payments thereunder ended on proper application to the compensation tribunal.¹³ Ordinarily, an agreement for compensation may be terminated only by following the statutory procedure,¹⁴ or by a supplemental agreement which is properly approved,¹⁵ and, regardless of the language used in the agreement, it may not be terminated by an unapproved agreement.¹⁶ As a general rule, an employer or insurer may not terminate an agreement by unilateral action,¹⁷ and an employer's refusal to make further payments under a compensation agreement does not terminate the agreement.¹⁸ An employer who discontinues payments under an agreement without first obtaining

Concealment of one injury

Where an employee sustained an accidental injury to a testicle and also to his back, and entered into a stipulation for compensation for injury to testicle without disclosing back injury, and stipulation was basis of an award, in view of concealment of back injury it would not constitute an abuse of discretion on part of compensation commission to refuse to vacate award where it was shown that employee's condition had changed as a result of back injury but had not changed as a result of testicle injury.

authorization to do so takes the risk of being able to justify such discontinuance by proving that the employee's disability had ceased at or before the time payments were stopped.¹⁹

An agreement for the payment of compensation may be suspended when it is shown that the employee is earning and receiving wages equivalent to those earned prior to the injury,²⁰ and it is not necessary to show that the employee's disability has temporarily ceased;²¹ but the fact that the employee is receiving equivalent wages is not sufficient to justify the termination of an agreement for compensation.²² An employer may obtain a review because of a change in the condition of the employee without having to show that the employee in fact has earned wages since the injury was sustained.²³ However, a temporary or intermittent cessation of total disability under an agreement to pay compensation during the period of total disability is not such a cessation as will justify the termination of an agreement.²⁴

On the employer's petition to terminate a compensation agreement on the ground that the employee has recovered sufficiently to engage in light work, the employee must, to prevent a termination, show that no source of permanent employment is open to one under the disadvantages which he suffers;²⁵ the criterion is not that the employee cannot perform the work he engaged in before the accident.²⁶

Where the evidence tends strongly to show that the employee has recovered, his refusal to submit his person to an expert X-ray examination will require the suspension of his right to compensation;²⁷ and when an agreement has been suspended by the compensation tribunal the employer is entirely free from liability to pay any compensation, unless there is a recurrence of disability within the period fixed for reinstatement.²⁸

Where the statute so provides, a compensation case may be reopened after a final settlement receipt has been approved only if there is a change for the worse in the condition of the employee,²⁹ and a rule of the compensation authorities which would permit the reopening of a case for reasons other than a change for the worse in the condition of the employee will be invalid and of no effect.³⁰

The fact that there has been a determination on an application for review of an agreement for compensation, whether that determination is that the employee's condition has or has not changed, does not preclude a subsequent application for review, where the subsequent application alleges that since the prior application was determined there has been a change in condition.³¹ Where one provision of a compensation act authorizes a review of an agreement entered into under mistake of fact, and a different provision permits review where there has been a recurrence or increase in disability, the latter provision should control where an employee has entered into an agreement under the mistaken belief that disability has permanently ceased and subsequently further disability develops.³²

Settlement of death claim. A provision authorizing a review and increase or diminution of compensation provided for by agreement is inapplicable where an agreement is entered into for compensation death benefits.³³ Where the widow and children are surviving dependents, the employer cannot have a compensation agreement terminated because the widow has received money in a settlement of her claim against a third person causing the death,³⁴ since the rights of the children, unless changed by

§ 897. — Conclusiveness of Original Claim or Award

On review of a compensation agreement or settlement, or an award based on such agreement or settlement, the agreement or settlement is res judicata, final, and binding, and constitutes a final determination of such facts as are material to the existence of liability.

Since an approved agreement or settlement for the payment of compensation is equivalent to a final award, judgment, or decree, as stated supra § 407, on review, such agreement or settlement, or an award based on such agreement or settlement and unappealed from, is res judicata and final,⁸⁶ and, in the absence of fraud, accident, or mistake, is binding on the parties.⁸⁷ There may be no inquiry into the validity of the agreement,⁸⁸ in the absence of an allegation of fraud or coercion,⁸⁹ and the authority of the board or commission to make an award on the agreement cannot be questioned on such a review.⁴⁰ On a petition by the employer for review on the ground that the particular injury described in the agreement no longer incapacitated the employee, it is not open to the employee to have considered a claim that there was an erroneous diagnosis of the original injury.⁴¹

Such agreement or settlement, or an award based on such agreement or settlement, constitutes a final determination of such facts as are material to the existence of liability,⁴² the fact of employment,⁴³ the fact of injury arising out of, and in the course of, employment,⁴⁴ and the fact of notice.⁴⁵ Such agreement or settlement, or an award based thereon, is conclusive as to the compensability of the accident or injury,⁴⁶ as long as the facts on which the awarding of compensation was predicated continue to be the facts in the case.⁴⁷ Likewise, where an award is made on stipulated facts, at a subsequent hearing on the grounds of changed conditions evidence of the stipulated facts need not be heard.⁴⁸

Such agreement or settlement, or an award based thereon, may not be a final determination of the extent of the injuries,⁴⁹ and may not be res judicata as to the employee's condition at a time subsequent to the time the agreement or settlement was made or approved.⁵⁰ Thus, an employee who in his original petition alleged a fifty per cent disability but compromised with his employer on the basis of a twenty-five per cent disability is not, on a review to increase his compensation for increased disability, concluded by his original allegation to the extent that he can only receive compensation on the excess over fifty per cent.⁵¹ Such agreement or settlement, or an award based thereon, may, however, be conclusive and binding as to the extent of the employee's disability at the time the agreement or settlement was made or approved;⁵² and this is so even though the whole evidence produced at the hearing to determine whether there has been a change in the employee's condition shows that the original award was wrong.⁵³ A properly approved agreement or settlement is not a final determination of the payments to be made;⁵⁴ except as to payments for the period covered;⁵⁵ but such agreement or settlement may be res judicata that the amount allowed was complete compensation for the injuries then known,⁵⁶ and an unappealed award based on such an agreement fixes the amount to which the employee is entitled, and the amount remains fixed until increased or decreased at a subsequent hearing on a change in the employee's condition.⁵⁷

On a petition to review an agreement for compensation because of a change in the condition of the employee, there may be a limitation as to the extent to which the doctrine of res judicata will be applied,⁵⁸ and it may be applied only to such issues as were actually raised and decided in the prior action;⁵⁹ and where it was not originally contended that the injury which was the subject of the compensation agreement had any psychical effects, the agreement as to such issue would not be res judicata.⁶⁰

§ 898. — What Agreements or Settlements Are Reviewable

- a. In general
- b. Lump sum or commutation agreements

a. In General

Whether a compensation agreement or settlement is subject to review because of a change in the condition of the employee usually will depend on the provisions of the compensation act and whether the agreement or settlement was approved in the required manner, and it may depend on the terms of the agreement or settlement itself.

Where the parties have entered into an agreement or settlement which determines the compensation that is to be paid, whether there may be a review of such an agreement or settlement because of a subsequent change in the condition of the employee may depend on the provisions of the compensation act;⁶¹ and, may also depend on whether the agreement or settlement has been approved by the compensation board or commission in the manner required by the compensation act.⁶² Under some compensation acts, an agreement or settlement which has not been approved by the proper tribunal in the required manner is not reviewable because of a change in the condition of the employee;⁶³ and where a statute declares that the approval of an agreement by the compensation board will render it final and binding, a conditional approval by the board is not final and binding so as to deprive the board of further jurisdiction, no question of change of condition being involved.⁶⁴

Compensation act provisions authorizing modification, termination, suspension, or reinstatement of compensation agreements or settlements because of a change in the condition of the employee apply only if a valid agreement or settlement has been entered into by the parties,⁶⁵ although such provisions may apply to compensation agreements which have been terminated or suspended as well as agreements which are existing.⁶⁶ Such provisions may apply to both original and supplemental agreements,⁶⁷ but do not apply where there has been a disallowance of a claim for compensation.⁶⁸ It may also be necessary that the agreement be one in which the employer admits that the disability of the employee arose out of an industrial accident.⁶⁹

An agreement for compensation may be effective as a complete settlement of a claim for compensation and as a bar to modification for a subsequent change in the employee's condition if the agreement expressly covers future, as well as past and present, disability arising out of the injury which is the basis of the claim;⁷⁰ but an agreement which does not cover future disability may be modified on application for review.⁷¹ On the other hand, a review on the ground of change in the condition of the employee may be permitted even though the agreement or settlement provides that there shall be no review,⁷² and clearly indicates that there is intended a full and final closeout of the claim for compensation.⁷³

Where no provision is made for review of a voluntary settlement, provision is made for a review of an award, a voluntary agreement for compensation which does not constitute an award is not subject to review because of a change in the condition of the employee,⁷⁴ and the fact that such agreements, to be effective, must be approved by the compensation board or commission, does not make them subject to review.⁷⁵ On the other hand, under a provision conferring continuing jurisdiction on the board or commission over claims for compensation, an agreement for compensation may be subject to review for change in the employee's condition;⁷⁶ but where the act also provides for the

Approval by single member

Fact that an agreement for compensation was approved by a single member of commission rather than by full commission would not render agreement inoperative and thereby permit a review because of changed condition of employee.

entry of a final award, the effect of which is to deprive the board or commission of further jurisdiction over any claim for the same injury or any results arising from it, an agreement for compensation on which a final award has been entered is not subject to review because of a change in the employee's condition which is due to the injury which was the subject of the agreement.⁷⁷

Under a provision that all awards of compensation and all settlements by agreement, where the amount to be paid does not exceed the compensation for six months disability, shall be final and not subject to readjustment, a settlement pursuant to an award for ten weeks' compensation will preclude additional compensation on the grounds of decreased capacity.⁷⁸

"Open end" agreements, that is, agreements not fixing the date of the end of the compensation period, are held not to be reviewable in some jurisdictions;⁷⁹ but in other jurisdictions where an agreement fixes the rate of payments but not the length of time of their continuance, the employee's physical condition is left open for further inquiry, and, if facts justifying it are found, the payments may be ordered continued.⁸⁰ Where a compensation act provides for temporary or partial awards with the further provision that such awards shall remain open until a final award can be made, the parties may enter into an agreement for a temporary or partial award which will be subject to modification from time to time.⁸¹

An agreement that there shall be no compensation is not an "agreement for compensation" under a statute declaring such a statute to be reviewable where there is a change in the employee's condition.⁸² Likewise, an employer's payment of a physician's bill for attendance during the first two weeks of an injury is not such an agreement.⁸³ It has been held that there is an "agreement", under a statute reciting that an agreement or award, under the act providing for compensation in installments, may, within a certain period, be reviewed by the board on the ground of recurred, increased, or diminished disability, where there is a voluntary payment by the employer of compensation, within the statutory period, and an acceptance thereof by the employee.⁸⁴

Under the provisions of some compensation acts the amount of compensation that will be paid for the disability or death of an employee may be increased if the injury was due to misconduct of the employer, as discussed supra §§ 332, 333, and, where the statute makes the employer rather than the insurer primarily liable for this increased amount, and further prohibits the shifting of this primary liability to insurer,⁸⁵ an agreement entered into between insurer and the injured employee for a compromise settlement, and providing for the release and discharge from all liability of the employer, does not preclude the employee thereafter from proceeding against the employer to recover the additional amount that should be awarded because the injuries sustained by the employee were due to the misconduct of the employer.⁸⁶

b. Lump Sum or Commutation Agreements

Whether lump sum settlements of compensation or commutations of payments into lump sums may be reviewed because of a change in the condition of the employee generally depends on the compensation act provisions, and also on whether the settlements are intended to be final and in full satisfaction of future, as well as existing, disability.

Lump sum settlements of compensation are almost always reviewable because of invalidating circumstances, such as fraud or mistake, existing at the time the settlement was made, as discussed supra § 410, and, under some compensation acts now or formerly existing, such settlements may be reviewable because of a subsequent change in the condition of the employee,⁸⁷ and may be reviewed even though the settlement itself recites that payment

Nonschedule adjustment or settlement

Where an award of compensation was rescinded by board for lack of proof of causal relation and case reheard, and on rehearing a so-called nonschedule adjustment or settlement was consummated with referee approval, such adjustment, not recognized by any statutory provision, was not binding on employee with respect to reopening of his claim.

N.Y.—Maschebet v. Success Baking Co., 100 N.Y.S.2d 614, 277 App.Div. 1069.

constitutes a complete settlement for present and future disability.⁸⁸ Under other compensation acts, now or formerly existing, such settlements are not subject to review because of a change in the condition of the employee.⁸⁹ This is particularly true where the lump sum settlement is intended to be final and in full satisfaction of all claims, and where the settlement has been approved in the manner required by the compensation act.⁹⁰ However, an unauthorized lump sum settlement may be set aside because of a subsequently appearing disability,⁹¹ and a change in the condition of the employee may authorize a review of a lump sum settlement which was not approved in the manner required by law,⁹² even though the agreement specifically waives the right of review.⁹³

Furthermore, although it may be within the power of a compensation board to approve a lump sum settlement and make it final and binding and not subject to review under any condition,⁹⁴ if the lump sum settlement which is approved provides that it is subject to limitations and conditions set out in the compensation act, it will be subject to review because of a change in the condition of the employee, even though the settlement agreement specifically covers all types of disability, past, present, and future, resulting from the accidental injury.⁹⁵ An agreement which is merely a settlement into one lump sum of the remaining weeks of compensation yet due without reference to any other award which might be made for change of condition, may be reviewed for change of condition.⁹⁶

Where one provision of a compensation act

authorizes a review of compensation settlements if the amount exceeds the compensation for six months disability, and another provision prohibits review of lump sum settlements, an award of compensation for more than six months disability which ordinarily would be reviewable under the first provision, is not reviewable because of the second provision where there was an agreement for lump sum payment.⁹⁷

A commutation of deferred payments into a lump sum may be reviewed because of a change in the condition of the employee,⁹⁸ and a commutation of periodical payments of compensation, which is not regarded as a compromise or settlement of compensation or a determination of amount by agreement of parties, but merely a mathematical computation of the present value of a series of future payments, may be reopened and reviewed because of a change in the condition of the employee, or because the periodical payments as commuted into a lump sum payment were not in the interest of justice.⁹⁹

§ 899. — Effect of Satisfaction, Receipt, or Release

After a compensation agreement has been satisfied by payment, whether there may be a review because of a subsequent change in the condition of the employee is generally determined by the provisions of the governing compensation act.

After an agreement for compensation has been satisfied by payment, whether there may be a review because of a change in the condition of the employee frequently depends on the particular provisions of the compensation act which are applicable.¹

1. In New Jersey

(1) As a result of 1931 amendment of compensation act it became immaterial to right of review for change in condition of employee whether compensation had been paid under an agreement which was approved by an award entered after formal hearing, or whether compensation was paid under an agreement approved by commission without a formal hearing.

N.J.—Solazco v. Carol, 185 A. 510, 14 N.J.Misc. 435.

(2) In cases decided under law as it existed prior to 1931 amendment,

The generally accepted rule is that where compensation has been paid and the award approved and the case closed, it may still be reopened on the grounds of a change in the employee's condition,² where the question of the permanency of the injuries was not considered in the settlement;³ and a final receipt⁴ or a release⁵ will not preclude a review on such grounds; not even, it has been held, where the receipt recites that the disability has ceased.⁶

On the other hand, under some compensation acts an award of compensation which is based on an agreement and which has been satisfied by payment, may not thereafter be reopened and reviewed because of a change in condition,⁷ particularly where there has been an approval of a final receipt,⁸ and where the compensation was paid under an agreement which did not call for continuing payments.⁹ If a settlement agreement may be reviewed because of a change in the condition of the employee, it may be reviewed where the receipt expressly states that it is subject to review as provided by law;¹⁰ but if a settlement agreement may not be reviewed on the ground of a change in the condition of the employee, a statement in the receipt that it is subject to review as provided by law may not subject the agreement to review where it is shown that there has been a change in the condition of the employee.¹¹ Thus, the provision in a settlement receipt that it is subject to review as provided by law may be meaningless except as a suggestion that there may be resort to equitable relief.¹² Where the judgment is limited to a fixed period, a satisfaction instrument based on such judgment will not bar a future right of action for a continuance of compensation.¹³

If compensation is sought for further disability after payment has been made under an agreement for compensation and after a receipt has been executed, the receipt may be set aside,¹⁴ but, under a statute so providing, it may be discretionary with whether there could be review because of change in condition depended on whether payment was pursuant to an agreement approved by board after formal hearing, or was pursuant to an agreement approved without formal hearing.

a compensation board or commission whether to set aside a settlement evidenced by a final receipt.¹⁵

§ 900. — Effect of Nature of Disability

If a compensation agreement or settlement is subject to review because of a change in the condition of the employee, modification may be allowed if disability has increased or decreased.

Ordinarily, if a compensation agreement or settlement is subject to review because of a change in the condition of the employee, modification may be allowed by the compensation tribunal if the incapacity of the employee has increased or decreased,¹⁶ and in the absence of a change in the condition of the employee modification may be denied.¹⁷ Thus, if an agreement is for compensation for a specified per cent of disability, there may be no review and an award of compensation for a greater per cent of disability, in the absence of any increase in the disability of the employee.¹⁸ If an agreement for compensation finally determines the amount of compensation to which the employee is entitled, the subsequent increase, decrease, or even absence of disability will not authorize a review of the agreement;¹⁹ and, accordingly, where pursuant to agreement an injured employee has received full compensation for a specific injury, further compensation may not be awarded for that injury;²⁰ and if full compensation has been paid under an agreement, the fact that a surgical operation would materially reduce the disability of the employee does not justify an order requiring that the employee be tendered such remedial operation.²¹ Furthermore, if an agreement is for compensation for the destruction, or permanent loss of the use, of a member of the body, as, an arm, leg, or eye, thereafter no review may be had for further compensation if there was in fact the destruction, or permanent loss of the use, of the member,²² and the extent of disability, incapacity to labor, or loss of earning power, consequent on such destruction or loss of use of the member is immaterial;²³ but if in fact the employee did not suffer the destruction or loss of use of a member of the body, there may be a review of the agreement and an award of further compensation where a change in the condition of the employee is shown.²⁴

Where the stipulation and receipt and order all recite that the cause is subject to the continuing jurisdiction of the commission on a change of condition, the additional award for permanent partial disability may be made without a showing of a change of condition.²⁵ Where an approved agreement provides for weekly payments during total disability, an employee's subsequent petition for further compensation for an alleged disablement since the date of his injury will be denied.²⁶ It has been held that, notwithstanding an approved agreement reciting that compensation was to be paid at a certain rate during present disability and additional compensation would be paid for subsequent incapacity due to the same injury, the employee, if there was a refusal to pay, may ask for a determination of permanent impairment.²⁷

Usually the change must have occurred after the agreement was made²⁸ or approved,²⁹ and a statute providing that an agreement for compensation may be modified at any time by a formal award when the disability of the employee has increased or diminished relates only to an increase or diminishment of disability occurring subsequent to the judgment awarding compensation on the agreement,³⁰ and such a statute does not authorize a correction or revision of errors residing in the adjudication.³¹

An agreement for compensation for partial disability usually does not operate as a bar to a subsequent award of compensation for total disability,³² providing total disability can be shown;³³ but an agreement for compensation for total disability is generally not subject to review for further compensation,³⁴ and this is true notwithstanding the employee is suffering from more physical pain and infirmity than before.³⁵ An agreement for compensation for total disability may, however, be reviewed where the condition of the employee has improved, and the agreement will not prevent a subsequent award for partial disability if it is found to exist.³⁶

Whether further compensation may be awarded may depend on whether the settlement was for temporary or permanent disability,³⁷ and it may be for the compensation board or commission to determine whether the settlement was for temporary or permanent disability where the record in the cause is in such condition that it does not disclose this fact.³⁸ A change in an employee's condition from industrial handicap to partial incapacity to work will authorize an award of further compensation, although the employee had received compensation in a lump sum settlement for his industrial handicap.³⁹

The fact that an employee, at the time of the payment of compensation for total temporary disability, may have known that he had permanent partial disability, did not impose on him the duty to make known such fact, or, because of his silence, estop him to thereafter ask for compensation for permanent partial disability.⁴⁰

Where a statute permits reclassification of a disability on proof that the previous classification was erroneous and not in the interest of justice, a compensation settlement may be reviewed without the necessity of showing a change in the condition of the employee.⁴¹

§ 901. Persons Entitled to Relief

Ordinarily, any party in interest may obtain a review of an agreement for compensation because of a change in the condition of the employee.

Ordinarily, compensation act provisions do not restrict the right to review compensation agreements to only one of the parties thereto,⁴² and under many of the statutes any party in interest is entitled to have a voluntary award reopened for a change in condition.⁴³ In some jurisdictions it has been held that the compensation commission may institute such proceedings of its own motion.⁴⁴ Under a statute giving dependents the same rights that the deceased employee would have had had he lived, a widow may be entitled to a determination of the permanent impairment of her husband's limbs although he had been paid for total disability until his death under an open end agreement.⁴⁵ However, if an injured employee dies after a motion to open his compensation case has been granted but before the hearing, his widow and dependent children will not be substituted as parties in such proceeding if no benefit would result from such substitution.⁴⁶

Jurisdiction over a proceeding to review an agreement for compensation because of a change in the condition of the employee is usually in the compensation board or commission.

As a general rule, jurisdiction of a proceeding to review an agreement for compensation because of a change in the condition of the employee is in the compensation board or commission,⁴⁷ such jurisdiction being derived from, or based on, the jurisdiction that was acquired through the original proceeding,⁴⁸ and the continuing jurisdiction which compensation boards and commissions have over all claims for compensation.⁴⁹ Such continuing jurisdiction is retained although an agreement has been entered into for the settlement of a compensation claim,⁵⁰ and it has been held to be the duty of the board or commission to retain such jurisdiction where it appears that future adjustments will be necessary.⁵¹

Even though no original claim for compensation is filed, it has been held that the compensation board or commission will, nevertheless, have jurisdiction of a proceeding to review an agreement for compensation because of a change in the condition of the employee,⁵² the agreement for compensation which is filed being regarded as a substitute for an original claim.⁵³ The filing of the agreement for compensation may be considered as conferring continuing jurisdiction on the board or commission for the determination of all questions of future liability due to the original injury and based on subsequent changes in the condition of the employee.⁵⁴

If an agreement for compensation is not intended to extinguish the employer's liability, an award founded on such agreement is subject to all the incidents of awards in general, and one incident is that the board or commission thereafter retains jurisdiction over the award for whatever review or modification its character may warrant under the provisions of the compensation act.⁵⁵ Furthermore, having acquired jurisdiction over a case by agreement, the board or commission may retain jurisdiction indefinitely,⁵⁶ but such jurisdiction is definitely limited to ending, increasing, or diminishing the compensation awarded or agreed on within the maximum and minimum amount specified, within the period fixed, when application for review is made by one of the interested parties;⁵⁷ and where a compensation board or commission, by approving of an agreement for compensation, determines that the employee lost the sight of an eye on a specified date, it thereafter has no jurisdiction to entertain a petition for further compensation based on the claim that the loss of sight of the eye did not occur until a later date.⁵⁸

A statute providing that the commission shall have the same power to open and modify an award as any court has to open and modify its judgment gives the commission jurisdiction in a proper case to open and modify a voluntary award and hear the case de novo.⁵⁹ Where the statute provides that the commissioner shall retain jurisdiction for any proper action during the whole compensation period, the commissioner will have jurisdiction to determine whether the balance due under a voluntary agreement for compensation for the loss of the sight of one eye survived to claimant's estate on his death.⁶⁰

Where a proceeding is brought to review an agreement for compensation because of a change in the condition of the employee, the fact that an occupational disease is alleged as a factor in causing the change of condition does not remove the cause from the classification of workmen's compensation cases.⁶¹

A provision in a compensation act to the effect that the act is not to be construed strictly has been held to apply to a provision conferring jurisdiction to review agreements for compensation where there has been a change in the condition of the employee;⁶² and, such a provision, construed liberally, does not restrict the power of the board to review such agreements only while compensation is being paid and while there is pending an order with respect to which compensation might be ended, diminished, or increased.⁶³ The filing of an agreement for the discontinuance of compensation and the termination of compensation in accordance with such an agreement does not deprive the board or commission forever of jurisdiction to entertain a claim for further compensation arising out of the same occurrence.⁶⁴

If a compensation board or commission correctly rules that it is without jurisdiction to entertain a petition to set aside a compromise settlement and grant further relief, it is immaterial that an incorrect reason for so ruling is given.⁶⁵

Right to question jurisdiction. Where the commission merely approved a settlement in the absence of a statement of facts or without hearing evidence or making findings, the commission's jurisdiction to reopen the case because of changed conditions may be questioned by any party in interest if the commission was without authority to award compensation in the first instance.⁶⁶ However, when a compensation board or commission has acquired jurisdiction in a cause by reason of action initiated by the employer or insurer, and thereafter an agreement for compensation is made and carried out, and subsequently the employee petitions for further compensation on the ground that there has been a change in his condition, neither the employer nor insurer can question the jurisdiction of the board or commission to conduct such review.⁶⁷

§ 903. Nature and Form of Proceedings

The proceeding whereby an agreement for compensation may be reviewed because of a change in the condition of the employee, ordinarily, is by a petition or application to review the agreement rather than by an original application for compensation.

Proceedings before an industrial board or commission for adjustment of compensation are wholly statutory,⁶⁸ and the application by statutory provisions to the facts of the particular case will determine the character of the proceeding as one for payment of compensation pursuant to agreement,⁶⁹ or an independent proceeding to determine the extent of existing incapacity⁷⁰ or a petition for review of an agreement.⁷¹ Where modification of an agreement because of a change in the condition of the employee is sought, it should be by a proceeding to review rather than by an original proceeding for compensation.⁷² A petition seeking additional compensation for permanent disability following a previous agreement may not be regarded as one for review.⁷³

After an agreement for compensation has been entered into and approved, the proper method to have determined whether there has been such a change in the condition of the injured employee as will warrant a modification or termination of the agreement may be by a petition to review,⁷⁴ filed in the first instance with the compensation board or commission, or the equivalent thereto.⁷⁵ When there is a disagreement between an employer and employee as to the continuance of payments under an agreement, a summary hearing as provided by statute may be had.⁷⁶

When full payment of compensation under an approved agreement has been made, and thereafter the employee seeks further compensation, if the compensation act provides two methods by which such further compensation may be obtained it may be immaterial which method is pursued provided proper grounds for action under one or the other is proved,⁷⁷ but the employee must bring himself within one or the other of the methods provided.⁷⁸

If an approved agreement for compensation does not constitute a formal award, a petition filed for modification of such agreement and for compensation for increased disability may not be regarded as a petition to modify an award,⁷⁹ but should be considered as an application for an original determination on the merits of the employee's statutory claim for compensation, a determination to which the statute entitles the employee.⁸⁰

§ 904. Time for Application and Limitations

A proceeding to review a compensation agreement or settlement on the ground that there has been a change in the condition of the employee must be brought within such time as is provided for by statute.

An application for increase, diminution, termination, or reinstatement of compensation provided for by agreement, or by an award based on an agreement, may be barred where not made within the time limited by statute,⁸¹ and provisions prescribing the time within which a review of an award of compensation may be sought are applicable where an agreement for compensation has attained the status of an award;⁸² but provisions limiting the right to proceed for compensation to a specified time after the accident, injury, or death are ordinarily held inapplicable to proceedings for the review of agreements or of awards based on agreements,⁸³ particularly where the agreement expressly reserved to the employee the right to apply for further compensation in case of an increase in disability.⁸⁴

applicable to proceedings for review of compensation agreements, or awards based on such agreements. Since an agreement for compensation may be regarded as a substitute for an original claim of compensation for the purpose of conferring on the board or commission jurisdiction of a proceeding to review the agreement because of a change in the condition of the employee, as stated supra § 902, if an agreement for compensation is filed within the time provided, a claim of additional compensation will not be denied on the ground that an original claim of compensation was not filed within the statutory period.⁸⁸

A provision in a compensation act limiting the time in which a proceeding may be brought to obtain a review of an agreement for compensation on the ground of a change in the condition of the injured employee has been held not to be a technical statute of limitations which, in conformity with common-law practice, must be affirmatively pleaded as a defense,⁸⁹ but rather a statute of repose which completely extinguishes the right, and not merely the remedy, and may be invoked even though it is not pleaded.⁹⁰ It has also been held that a provision limiting the time within which review may be had of an agreement for compensation constitutes a limitation on the right and not on the remedy, and that the right afforded is conditioned on its exercise within the limitation period, so that its non-exercise within that period operates to extinguish the right altogether, and, consequently, the making of a claim for review within the statutory period is jurisdictional, and may not be waived by the parties, but is always open to assertion at any stage of the proceedings,⁹¹ and where a further award of compensation is made after the expiration of the time for review of the agreement, if the compensation tribunal was without jurisdiction to enter such award, the court to which the case came is correspondingly without jurisdiction.⁹² On the other hand, it has been held that a requirement that a decision of the compensation board be filed with the court within a specified number of days does not constitute a condition to the acquirement of jurisdiction by the court, and the court has jurisdiction to decree additional compensation in revision of a decision of the compensation board, although the decision of the board was not filed within the period specified.⁹³

The time within which a proceeding must be commenced to obtain a review of an agreement for compensation because of a change in the condition of the employee may depend on the particular provision under which the proceeding for review is brought,⁹⁴ and it may also depend on the nature of the injury which the employee suffered.⁹⁵

In the case of a lump sum settlement it has been held that a suit for revision will not be entertained after expiration of the term covered by the settlement;⁹⁶ but where the parties conduct negotiations

Discharge of special fund for reopened cases

Where employee had suffered no decrease in earning capacity after award of lump sum settlement, under statute providing that date of last payment under a lump sum settlement shall be considered date to which amount paid would extend if award had been made on date lump which are merely an attempt to compromise, with no lump sum settlement being effected, the prescription period provided by statute for review of lump sum settlements does not apply.⁹⁷

Under a statute providing that an application for modification of an award shall not be filed after a stated period from termination of the compensation period fixed in the original award, made by agreement or on hearing, where termination of compensation is not fixed by the agreement, the date of termination for purposes of limitations may be fixed by the board,⁹⁸ and the limitation begins to run on termination of the compensation period as fixed by the award or by the board,⁹⁹ and not from the date of the award.¹ Where the period of disability has not been fixed the statute does not run.² The fact that the employee signs a receipt reciting that his disability has ceased does not conclusively show such fact or that the compensation period had terminated so as to make limitations applicable.³ Under such statutes an agreement approved by the board has the effect of an award as far as limitations are concerned.⁴

Under some compensation act provisions, a review of an agreement for compensation because of a change in the employee's condition may be had at any time, and provisions of this nature are sometimes construed as imposing no limitation on the time in which an award pursuant to agreement may be reviewed,⁵ or are construed as permitting review at any time within the period of disability,⁶ or at any time while the board or commission retains jurisdiction;⁷ and the length of time the board or commission retains jurisdiction may depend on the terms of the agreement, or of the award that is based on the agreement.⁸ Other provisions of this nature are construed as not affording the employee unlimited time within which to apply for review,⁹ and may merely mean that a petition or application for review may be filed at any time before a claim for compensation is finally disposed of,¹⁰ restricting the time within which a petition to review may be filed to the period the agreement has to run.¹¹ Where a limitation is imposed as to the time when review may be sought after the termination of an agreement for compensation, such limitation applies only where there has been a proper termination of the agreement,¹² and the fact that the employer refuses to make payments under an agreement does not terminate the agreement for the purpose of starting the limitation period to run.¹³

Under statutes providing that an agreement or award may be modified at any time by a subsequent agreement, or reviewed on the application of either party, the words "at any time" have been construed as applicable only to modification by agreement of the parties and not to the review provided for,¹⁴ and the latter should be made within the period otherwise limited by statute.¹⁵ Furthermore, where a compensation act contains a provision of this nature and also a provision limiting the time within which a proceeding may be brought to obtain a review of an agreement for compensation on the ground of change in the condition of the injured employee, the limitation provision may be the provision that will control.¹⁶

Provisions limiting the time within which applications may be made for review of agreements for sum payment was approved at maximum compensation rate warranted by employee's earning capacity, on reopening of case three-year limitation on liability of employer and compensation insurer running from date of last payment had not commenced to run and special fund for reopened cases was properly discharged from liability.

compensation because of a change in the condition of the employee require that there be some action which will start the limitation period to run, and if such action as is required is not taken, the compensation provided for by the agreement may be increased, decreased, or terminated at any time.¹⁷ Thus, if approval of the compensation agreement is required to start the limitation period to run, in the absence of the required approval the application for review may be made at any time.¹⁸ If a compensation case has not been dismissed, vacated, or in any other manner brought to a conclusion, with the petition for compensation in full force and effect notwithstanding the agreement, additional compensation may not be denied because of the lapse of time;¹⁹ and, similarly, if at the time of filing a petition for review there is a properly approved subsisting preliminary agreement for compensation which has not been altered or terminated by a decree of court or by any subsequent agreement of the parties, the limitation period will not have commenced to run.²⁰ If the period in which to obtain a review starts to run from the date of the last or final payment, an application for review of an award on an agreement may be barred where it is not within the period so provided,²¹ and the application is timely when it is within such period.²² In determining the date of the last or final payment, the date when medical aid was furnished the employee may be regarded as the date of the last or final payment,²³ although it has also been held that the payment of medical bills by the employer or insurer does not constitute a payment of compensation to determine the date of the starting of the period of limitations.²⁴

Where a compensation act provides that review may be had within a specified time after notice to the board of final payment under the agreement, notice of final payment must be given to start the limitation period to run,²⁵ and notice of final payment may be given by the employer or by insurer, and notice from such source will be sufficient to start the limitation period to run.²⁶ Where a compensation act provides that a proceeding to obtain compensation in addition to that provided for by an agreement must be brought within a specified time after the last payment under the agreement, it is not necessary that there should be a formal hearing closing the case in order for the period to commence to run.²⁷

An employer or insurer seeking to have an agreement for compensation modified or terminated may file the petition to effect this purpose at any time within the period allowed by law,²⁸ and the petitioner may wait until such time within the statutory period as he is prepared to prove the facts necessary to obtain the modification or termination of the agreement;²⁹ and the petitioner is not precluded from maintaining such a proceeding because he waits to file the petition until near the end of the statutory period.³⁰ Similarly, in a case where a compromise has been made and the employee has a specified period of time in which to sue to annul the compromise and recover the compensation that is due to him, he may wait until near the end of the specified period to institute the action to annul.³¹

Where a provision of a compensation act is to the effect that in the case of temporary disability compensation shall not continue for more than six years, and another provision is to the effect that the powers and jurisdiction of the compensation commission over each case shall be continuing, and it may from time to time make such modification or change with respect to former findings, or orders with respect thereto, as in its opinion may be justified, the two provisions are not in conflict with respect to the time within which there may be an award of compensation in addition to that paid under a settlement agreement.³² The first provision merely fixes the period during which payment is to extend, and does not determine or fix the time for application to be made for an award of additional compensation because of a change in the condition of the employee.³³

Where a provision is added to a compensation act limiting the time within which application for review of an agreement for compensation must be made, such a limitation relates to procedure, and may be made applicable to pending cases, and it is not necessary that it should be confined in its application to accidents which occur after the passage and approval of the provision.³⁴

Statutes extending period of limitations on reclassification of disability have been held to permit reclassification of disability within the extended period where the case had been closed on a lump sum settlement prior to the enactment of the statutory extension and the limitation period theretofore in effect had already expired.³⁵

Tolling of statutory period. When a review of an agreement for compensation is sought because of a change in the condition of the employee, the application for review must be made within the time provided by statute, unless there has been a tolling of the statute,³⁶ and the running of the statute may be tolled by the conduct or declarations of the party invoking the protection of the statute.³⁷ The conduct of the employer may constitute such a quasi estoppel as to preclude the setting up of the bar of limitations,³⁸ but in order that the conduct of the employer toll the running of the limitation period there must be statements or representations which deceived or misled the employee.³⁹ The confinement of the employee in a penal institution has been held not to extend his right to review beyond the statutory period.⁴⁰ Where the injured employee is a minor at the time an agreement for compensation is made, the commencement of the period for instituting proceedings to obtain compensation in addition to that provided for by the agreement, may be extended to the date the employee attains majority.⁴¹

The general rule, as discussed in Limitations of Actions § 247, to the effect that a statute of limitations will not run against a right in litigation has been held to apply to a provision limiting the time within which review of an agreement for compensation may be sought.⁴² In accordance with this rule, the filing of a claim for review and for compensation in addition to that provided for by an agreement will toll the running of a statute of limitations;⁴³ and time limitations may not run during the period a petition for termination of an agreement for compensation and the answer thereto are pending before a compensation tribunal,⁴⁴ nor will limitations begin to run prior to a determination of an appeal from the award.⁴⁵

Laches. While an application for increase, diminution, termination, or reinstatement of compensation provided for by agreement, or by an award based on an agreement, may be barred where not made promptly,⁴⁶ the doctrine of laches is not always applicable to such applications,⁴⁷ and if the doctrine of laches is not applicable, a petition for

Doctrine of laches explained

In a proceeding where injured employee sought to have reviewed agreement for compensation because his condition had changed, and where respondent urged defense of laches, it was held that in this connection laches involves more than mere delay, mere lapse of time, and to deserve that category delay must be for a length of time which, unexplained and unexcused, is altogether unreasonable under circumstances, and has been prejudicial to party asserting it or renders it very doubtful that truth can be ascertained and justice administered.

compensation in addition to that provided for by an agreement may be filed and considered, even though long after the last payment under the agreement.⁴⁸

§ 905. Conditions Precedent

A review of a compensation agreement or settlement for change in condition of the employee may be maintained only if there has been compliance with such conditions precedent as may exist, and it is essential that there be an agreement that may be reviewed.

It is a prerequisite to a review of an agreement for compensation because the disability of the employee has subsequently recurred, increased, diminished, or ended, that there be an agreement for compensation which may be reviewed.⁴⁹ Under some compensation acts, if a valid compromise settlement of a claim for compensation has been entered into, the compensation board or commission has no jurisdiction to entertain a claim for further compensation until such settlement has been set aside;⁵⁰ and it may be a prerequisite to the reopening of a case which has been closed by a compromise settlement under which payments have been made, that there be a tender of the money paid under the compromise settlement,⁵¹ unless it is shown that such a tender would be refused.⁵² However, where final payment of compensation has been made under an agreement and a final receipt given, and thereafter it is sought to have the agreement reinstated because of a recurrence of the disability, the fact that a final receipt has been signed may be of no significance,⁵³ and it is not necessary to first move to set it aside.⁵⁴ Furthermore, where an employee has entered into an agreement suspending further payments of compensation, and thereafter claims additional compensation because he did not recover from the injury as expected, the employee has a remedy at law to obtain such additional compensation, and the remedy at law is available without resorting to a bill to set aside the agreement suspending compensation payments.⁵⁵
